AFL-CIO stamp eases Clinton's rocky road

Knight-Ridder News Service

DETROIT — Bill Clinton's drive toward the Democratic presidential nomination has been bumpy, but the road should become smoother with the impending endorsement of the nation's largest labor organization.

Political analysts and strategists, and labor experts and leaders agree that the backing of Clinton by the AFL-CIO is a clarion call for Democratic leaders to rally behind the Arkansas governor, considered through most of the campaign as the party's best bet against President Bush in November's general election.

Utah polls — A4

Leaders of the 14.2 million-member umbrella labor organization met early this week and decided to ante up for Clinton. Their decision is expected to be approved by the executive council on May 5.

"Our effort is to keep Bill Clinton from coming into the convention exhausted and fighting for delegates," explained AFL-CIO political director Rex Hardesty. "We want to do all we can to put him over the top so he'll be in good position for the fall election."

What it means is that Clinton can coast into the national convention in July without having to haggle for delegates. With labor's endorsement, Clinton now appears likely to net most of the 772 super delegates — members of Congress and ranking party members. Already this week, House Speaker Thomas Foley of Washington and West Virginia Sen. Jay Rockefeller have aligned with Clinton. So has Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt.

It takes 2,145 delegates to win the nomination. Clinton now has 1,326, after picking up four more Wednesday in Missouri. Brown has just 271.

The endorsement also means he can breathe easier after a bruising New York battle, as he goes into the April 28 Pennsylvania primary, the next big delegate state, with virtual assurance of victory in that state, which has a heavy labor base.

"It is a very pragmatic recognition that Bill Clinton is the consensus candidate," said Boston-based Democratic consultant

When hobby turns into passion for vintage wheel collectors

TWIN FALLS – Diane Stedtnitz complains that all the packages delivered to her home go to a "Miss Davidson."

Miss Harley Davidson, that is.

Diane named her husband Rick's 1963 Harley the "Iron Mistress."

The motorcycle, which has a 1940 vintage, 80-cubic-centimeter pan head, was one of 150 entries in Magic Valley Early Iron club's hot rod show this weekend at the College of Southern Idaho's Expo Center.

The cars were judged in more than 30 categories by other participants in the show.

Rick Stedtnitz, who was wearing a black leather jacket, has a winged skull tatoo emblazoned on his left arm. He explained apologetically that his first intention for the beat-up chopper he bought for $200 was to paint it and get it running.

"One thing after the other, it turned into an obsession," said the 32-year-old Stedtnitz, who lives in Elko, Nev.

Rate of assaults, rapes on upswing

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — An estimated 59 percent surge in rapes and attempted rapes and a substantial increase in assaults spurred a dramatic rise in violent crime last year, according to a Justice Department survey of crime victims released Sunday.

Preliminary figures showed there were 2,612,150 completed violent crimes last year, up 7.9 percent from an estimated 2,421,530 the previous year. Including attempted violent crimes, the total was 6,427,480 million last year, up 7 percent from 6,008,790 million in 1990.

But department officials cautioned that the percentage increases could be misleading because they translated into only marginal rises in crime rates.

The Justice Department noted that its estimate of the total number of crimes and attempted crimes last year — 35 million — was well below the 41.4 million of 1981. The estimates by the Bureau of Justice Statistics have shown a gradual decline in crime since its annual National Crime Survey was begun in 1973.

Still, the 6.4 million total completed and attempted violent crimes was the third highest since 1973.

The bureau's annual National Crime Survey estimated there were 31.3 attempted or completed violent crimes per 1,000 people last year. That's up from 29.6 per 1,000 in 1990, but it's well below the record rate of 35.3 per 1,000 in 1981. These offenses include rape, robbery and assault, but not murder.

As for rapes and attempted rapes, there were an estimated 207,610 in 1991, up 59 percent from an estimated 130,260 the previous year. The rate of such

Yeltsin supporters rallied Sunday to defend their leader and his radical economic reforms against parliament attempts to curb his powers.

Yeltsin supporters ask for vote of trust

Los Angeles Times

MOSCOW — Frustrated by the slowness of Russia's political and economic reforms, President Boris N. Yeltsin's supporters called Sunday for a national referendum on granting him unlimited powers and, at the same time, suspending the elected parliament.

The call was made at a rally of 25,000 at the walls of the Kremlin. While not large by Moscow standards, its organizers clearly intended it as the start of a campaign to win for Yeltsin the authority to implement by decree all the fundamental reforms that he says are now blocked by conservative lawmakers.

Father Gleb Yakunin, a leading radical in the Congress of People's Deputies, said that voters should be asked, "Do you trust President Yeltsin, and are you ready to give him extraordinary powers, concurrently suspending the work of the Congress of People's Deputies and the legislature for a year?"

"We must act now," Ilya I. Zaslavksy, a leader of the influential movement Democratic Russia, told the rally. "We must hold the referendum. We must tell the government to carry out reforms in a more decisive way."

Other speakers called for a purge of officials who had belonged to the Communist Party and failed to resign before the unsuccessful coup d'etat led by Communist hard-liners last August.

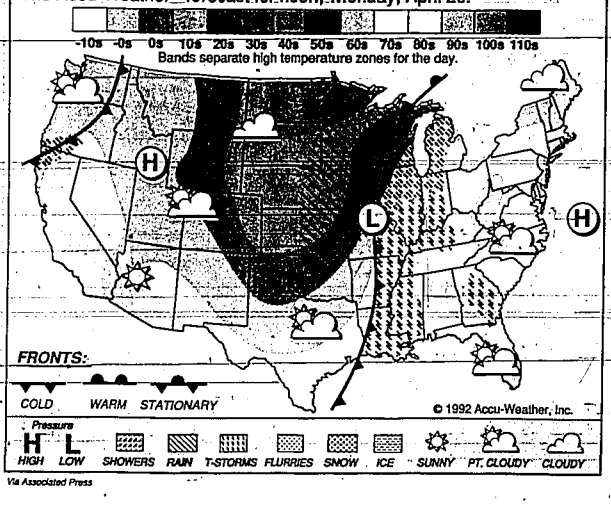

They also called for further protests to isolate those political leaders who, although recognized as democrats, have criticized Yeltsin's policies, and they targeted for removal Ruslan Khasbulatov, the chairman of the Supreme Soviet, the country's legislature, who opposes a strong presidency at the cost of a weakened parliament.

Rain falls on southern Plains; Snow in South Dakota

The Associated Press

A storm front sweeping across the southern Plains brought rain and thunderstorms to wide stretches of the Midwest and Gulf states on Sunday, while more than a foot of snow fell on the Black Hills of South Dakota.

Much of the north Atlantic coast was cloudy and cool, but the rest of the nation generally enjoyed a sunny Easter Sunday. Temperatures rose into the 70s along the south Atlantic coast after Saturday's rains, but it remained cool over the Rocky Mountains.

Strong winds blew across Southern California and the Midwest.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered across much of Texas, throughout eastern Kansas, western Missouri and southwestern Iowa on Sunday afternoon. Rain also fell on parts of New Mexico and Colorado and was widely scattered across Florida and Alabama.

As the storm front moved across the South, weather forecasters issued tornado watches for Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana.

Heavier rainfall totals recorded Saturday morning included 2.23 inches at Meridian, Miss.; 1.70 inches at Valparaiso, Fla.; and 1.43 inches at Oklahoma City.

Rain also fell on Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and upper Michigan.

A winter-like storm slummed into South Dakota's Black Hills, dropping 15 inches of snow near Deadwood.

Strong winds in some areas of the state created blizzard conditions and made travel all but impossible. Wind gusts of 64 mph were recorded in Rapid City, S.D.

Skies were sunny throughout most of the West, including California, Arizona, Idaho and eastern Washington. Strong winds continued for a second day in Southern California, where a wind advisory for mountain passes was issued. Strong winds also buffeted the Midwest, from the northern Plains to Texas and Oklahoma.

Temperatures remained in the 60s overnight across much of the Gulf region from Florida to Texas, but it was cold in New Mexico.

Saturday's low temperature for the Lower 48 states was 19 degrees at Gallup, N.M.

Clinton

Ann Lewis. "Labor is saying we're serious in trying to make a difference in this election."

What the endorsement does not mean is that a victory in November is guaranteed. That was demonstrated in 1988 with Michael Dukakis and in 1984 with Walter Mondale, both of whom had the support of virtually all of organized labor but lost to the GOP nominee.

The AFL-CIO move repudiates Clinton's irritant, former California Gov. Jerry Brown, the lone surviving challenger who had netted significant support from labor in Michigan and in New York.

"What this endorsement does to Jerry Brown is say you can keep campaigning but you're on your own," said AFSCME's Scott. "There'll be no more labor halls for rallies."

The support for Clinton is fueled largely by the strong sentiment among labor leaders that Bush can be beaten and antipathy for the president's economic policies. On labor issues, they point to his signing Monday of an executive order barring unions using fees from non-union workers for political purposes.

"It's just facing reality," said Joe Mangone, political director for the United Auto Workers. "When you get right down to it the choice is either Bush or Clinton, and Bush has spent his entire life attacking labor."

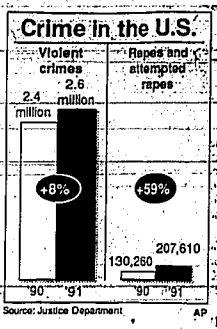

What the AFL-CIO can bring to the Clinton campaign is an enormous amount of resources — people and money — and political savvy. Analysts point out that unions also wield a lot of clout over their members, although as many as a third voted for Bush in 1988.

Elaine Kamarck, who worked for Mondale and now is with the Progressive Policy Institute in Washington, echoes that opinion. "One of the things unions are very good at is telling their members about the candidate and getting out the vote," she said. "The labor movement is a traditional source of volunteers and manpower for the Democratic candidate."

But analysts and strategists caution against overstating the significance of having the AFL-CIO's backing. The support of labor alone cannot deliver the White House to the Democrats, but without it winning the presidency is virtually impossible.

Analysts note that while labor still represents a sizable chunk of the electorate, roughly 17 million workers, the percentage of the work force represented has declined as the number of people employed has swelled over the past two decades.

In 1984, for example, there were 92.1 million workers in the United States and 18.8 percent of them belonged to labor unions or employee associations, according to the Department of Labor. In 1991, the number of workers had reached 102.7 million and 16.1 percent of them were unionized.

assaults was 1 per 1,000, compared with 0.6 per 1,000 the previous year.

Rapes and attempted rapes had occurred at or near the rate of 1 per 1,000 people during 12 of the last 18 years.

The increase in the estimated number of rapes and attempted rapes was considered statistically significant, although department officials cautioned that the figures are estimates based on a broad survey sample, rather than an actual count.

The methodology used gives department statisticians 95 percent confidence that the actual numbers would be the same if every household could be questioned.

Pat Russell of Twin Falls, who has a 820-horsepower, fuel-injected Sprinter race car, said he puts food on the table at home, but the rest of his money gets dumped on race cars.

"Common sense has nothing to do with it," he said.

Russell keeps speed records for his car, which can go 180 mph, in his Bible.

Four years ago, Brad Peterson of Twin Falls bought a 1931 Model A that used to be a Blaine County Sheriff's Department car at an auction for $25.

The front end was smashed, probably during a chase, said Alan Newlan of Twin Falls, who helped Peterson log 1,500 hours reshaping the car, which now sports electric doors, windows and trunk.

They put the car on a 1978 Lincoln Mark V frame and took 5½ inches off the roof.

Several exhibitors found humor in their extravagant hobbies.

Theron Walker calls his 1976 flat-bottom racing boat with a competitive Cam 800 CFM engine, "Blown Income."

Ormond Smith of Buhl rebuilt his 1915 Model "T" Torpedo with a "mother-in-law" seat. It's located in the back of the car.

By itself.

H. Blaine Johnson of St. George, Utah, had a Prohibition-era mohawk pickup, complete with a bullet in the back seat of its silver-and-red interior 1931 Graham sedan.

He spent several hours on his knees with a hammer shaping parts for his car, which was a fragile rust heap when his son bought it for him in 1983.

"I love this show because it brings out the individual engineering talents of average hobbyists," Johnson said. Big shows are more about who has the most money, he said.

But much of the local show is also about reminiscing.

Denny and Fran Rundle's red-and-white leather interior 1955 Plymouth Belvedere played 1950s tunes.

On Saturday night, show entrants and their families danced at the Turf Club to 1950s and 1960s music.

Dick Huizinga of Burley had a lot to remember with his 1940 silver pickup.

"When we were 12 years old, my best friend and I borrowed his dad's 1940 Ford pickup," he wrote on a cardboard poster. "We had to sit on a pillow in order to see to drive. That wonderful afternoon was all the driver's education either of us ever had. ..."

Teen with reattached arms copes with healing

HARVEY, N.D. (AP) — At first, he jokes with his physical therapist as they stretch and move his reattached arms. But it's not long before John Thompson shows the wear and frustration of constant therapy and prolonged uncertainty.

A single tear streams down his face. A nurse wipes it away. "Just one of those days, huh?" therapist Kelly Christenson asks as he stretches the farm worker's limp hand.

"I'm just really tired," the weary 18-year-old from Hurdsfield replies with a nod.

Laconic, shy, edgy and amiable, the tall blond teen-ager lost weight from his already slender frame after a Jan. 11 accident at the family farm in which his arms were torn off at the shoulders. A surgeon reattached them.

Most of the time, his arms stay bandaged and in splints. Bared for therapy, a visitor sees his right arm is still swollen below the elbow and his arms are a patchwork of skin grafts.

Swift changes of emotion are daily weather for Thompson. Tedious physical therapy to help the arms heal and strengthen takes enormous amounts of time. Three times a week, he drives 20 miles in a specially equipped car to Harvey's St. Aloisius Hospital for two-hour sessions. He undergoes similar daily therapy at home.

Thompson, who favors sweatshirts and baseball cap with a heavy metal band insignia, also goes to school, though usually no more than a few hours each day, and accommodates requests for interviews with news media.

Everything he does reminds him of his injuries.

He even sang a solo recently at a district chorus competition. But he wasn't happy.

"People came to look at me, they didn't come to listen to me," he said. "I got nervous. I forgot the words to the song."

Thompson was working alone on the farm when he became entangled in power machinery that ripped off his arms. He staggered 400 feet to his house, opening doors with his mouth and using a pencil to punch buttons on the telephone to summon help.

AP photo

Dr. Curt Juhula, left, examines skin grafts on the shoulder of John Thompson, 19, of Hurdsfield, N.D., earlier this month in Bismarck. Thompson had both arms reattached after a farm accident.

His story has touched people around the world.

He's got a growing collection of videotapes and newspaper clippings from all the news he's made. Gifts cards and banners fill the Thompson basement.

He still gets calls from well-wishers around the country. One woman stopped by unannounced with a homemade ointment she said would help his arms. A faith healer called several times from California.

At an April 11 boxing match in Bismarck, his first big outing since the accident, so many people wanted to speak to him, he said, "I barely even got to see the fight."

The sudden inability to perform the most mundane tasks frustrates him, said his mother, Karen.

"John's able to do a lot, but I think he still gets frustrated at what he can't do by himself," Mrs. Thompson said.

Doctors outfitted him with special eating utensils that can be attached to his splints, but they don't work well, she said. He's practically given up using them.

'John's able to do a lot, but I think he still gets frustrated at what he can't do by himself.'

— Karen Thompson, John's mother

He recently bought a new car equipped with a special steering wheel, ignition and shifter. Thompson said he can drive it fine, but can't open the doors. Now he's waiting for the car dealer to install push-button openers.

Despite these hindrances, Thompson said he keeps up his spirits knowing he's making progress and getting better.

His shoulder mobility is good, said Christenson, the therapist, and his pain has receded.

During physical therapy Thompson and Christenson gently stretch both Thompson's arms above his head. His elbows, which can now move somewhat, are manipulated lightly to increase their strength. They stretch Thompson's fingers to keep them from locking up.

Christenson tests involuntary muscle movement using a device that sends minute amounts of electricity into Thompson's arms.

Thompson still can't move his hands or fingers on his own, but the digits contract when electricity is placed against a nerve or muscle in his arm.

"That's a really good sign," Christenson said.

Station will run ads with dead fetuses

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) – A television station says it reluctantly will begin broadcasting campaign commercials Monday that show graphic photos of dead fetuses.

The ads are for Michael E. Bailey, who is seeking the Republican primary nomination for the 9th District congressional seat held by Democrat Lee Hamilton. The primary is May 5.

Bailey said the ads show pictures of fetuses he claims were taken from an abortion clinic's trash bin. They will run 14 times this week on Indianapolis station WISH-TV.

Paul Karpowicz, station president and general manager, said the 30-second spots are "really not suitable for television" but that his station had no choice but to broadcast them.

Videotapes of the ads were sent to the station's Washington attorneys for an opinion from the Federal Communications Commission, he said.

"The response that came back is yes, you do (have to run the ads)," Karpowicz said. "Had he not been a federal candidate, we would not have accepted the spot. If we had any recourse, we would not run it."

He said the station would run disclaimers before and after the ads noting that they contain material that some viewers may find objectionable.

State appeals to overturn execution stay

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) – Prosecutors awaited word Sunday on their appeal to reverse a judge's order that halted the execution of murderer Robert Alton Harris days before he was to go to the gas chamber.

U.S. District Judge Marilyn Hall Patel on Saturday issued a 10-day restraining order, agreeing with Harris' lawyers that there was sufficient evidence for a federal court to consider whether death by lethal gas is unconstitutional under protections against cruel and unusual punishment.

Patel

State lawyers immediately filed an appeal with the 9th Circuit Court of Appeals, said Dave Puglia, spokesman for the state Attorney General's Office.

He did not know when the appeals court would rule.

Both sides are prepared to take their case to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Patel ruled on a class-action lawsuit filed on behalf of all 328 inmates on California's death row in San Quentin state prison.

The order, three days before Harris was to die in the gas chamber, would prevent his execution until early June at the earliest.

Harris was convicted in the 1978 murders of two San Diego teen-agers. His death sentence has provoked public debate in California, where nobody has been put to death since 1967.

Relatives of the 16-year-old victims, John Mayeski and Michael Baker, said the method of execution shouldn't be an issue.

"I don't really care how they do it, as long as they do it," said Baker's father, Steven, a San Diego police detective. "The 14 years this thing's gone on and the emotional roller coaster that the family has been on does not speak well of the criminal justice system."

The trial jury found that Harris shot Mayeski and Baker after he and his brother Danny kidnapped the teen-agers in order to use their car in a bank robbery that netted $3,000.

Patel set an April 28 hearing, at which she could effectively ban California from using lethal gas for executions. But even if she denies the request, the state could not schedule the execution for 40 days.

The latest appeals from defense lawyers followed Gov. Pete Wilson's denial of clemency on Thursday. The defense appeals were based on arguments Harris was not responsible for his crimes because he suffered from fetal alcohol syndrome and years of childhood abuse.

At Saturday's hearing, American Civil Liberties Union lawyer Michael Laurence said 20 states have adopted lethal injection as a means of execution since 1976. California, Arizona and Maryland are the only states that still use the gas chamber, he said.

"We are simply asking the state to stop a very torturous and barbaric execution for a week to 10 days," he said. "We are not specifying what should take its place."

But Deputy Attorney General Dane Gillette argued Harris had opportunities to raise the issue during numerous state and federal appeals since his conviction in February 1979.

Also Saturday, a federal appeals court in San Francisco rejected a separate request to stay Harris' execution based on contentions that prosecutors withheld evidence that his brother, and not Harris, may have shot one of the boys.

Defense lawyers working on that case also planned to file an appeal with the 9th Circuit Court in San Francisco.

Deserters may account for some MIAs

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) – Soldiers who deserted during the Vietnam War may account for a number of sightings of Americans in Indochina after prisoners of war were returned in 1973, a U.S. senator said Sunday.

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., said at a news conference that there was evidence of "a significant enough number" of deserters to take into account when evaluating reports of sightings of American servicemen unaccounted-for after the Vietnam War.

All American POWs were supposed to be repatriated in 1973 under terms of the Paris Peace Accords on Vietnam, but the fate of many who were listed as missing in action has never been definitively established. Almost 2,300 Americans are still listed as missing.

Kerry and four other members of the Senate Select Committee on POW-MIA Affairs are scheduled to begin a visit Monday to the three countries of Indochina – Cambodia, Vietnam and Laos.

Kerry, chairman of the committee, said the panel can identify no specific cases of American deserters who might still be alive. But he said it does have information about deserters and others who may have remained in Indochina after the war.

"There is some evidence, still being measured, that some people were still alive in Laos after the 1973 records," Kerry said.

He declined to provide any details.

During its trip, the committee plans to visit some caves in Laos where American prisoners are known to have been held.

The senators also said they would meet with an individual who has provided several photographs purporting to show missing Americans still alive in the region. They would not identify the person.

Protesting nuns, priest arrested at Air Force base

OSCODA, Mich. (AP) – A Roman Catholic priest and four nuns, including one 81 years old, were arrested after cutting a fence at Wurtsmith Air Force Base early Sunday and painting: "Christ Lives. Disarm." on a weapons bunker.

Michigan Life Community, a peace group based in central Michigan, said the bunker contains nuclear weapons. It wants the weapons dismantled, spokeswoman Sister Carol Gilbert said.

But Lt. John Tillis, a base spokesman, said the storage bunker was empty and had only been used for conventional weapons. The Air Force never confirms or denies the presence of nuclear weapons at its sites.

Base security arrested the five and turned them over to federal marshals. Messages left at the marshals office Sunday were not immediately returned.

Tillis said damage was less than $700 and the protesters posed no threat to military equipment.

Papers look to link jobs, workers

Requests flood free want ad program

BOSTON (AP) — The unemployment checks were running out for laid-off trucker Richard Corriveau, and no jobs were in sight.

His prospects changed when he took advantage of a newspaper's offer to run free classified ads for people seeking work.

Other papers around the country are doing the same thing — to help out in the recession and attract more advertisers and subscribers.

"There is a public service aspect, but it also has a goal of building the paper," said J. Kendrick Noble, a newspaper industry consultant.

Last month, more than 10,000 people submitted ads when The Boston Globe ran a free-classified ad program, said Richard Gulla, a Globe spokesman.

The five-line ads normally would have cost each person around $22.

"No one was presumptuous here to think we could create jobs," Gulla said. "But if we could match up people with available jobs, we thought we could do a good thing."

The Springfield (Mass.) Union-News and the New Haven (Conn.) Register have initiated similar programs, and The Washington Times is considering free ads for job seekers.

A smiling Richard Corriveau shows the situation want ads of last week's Boston Globe. Thanks to his free want ad, Corriveau will soon start training to become a bus driver.

Corriveau, 44, of Lawrence, had been out of work for several months when he mailed in his ad to the Globe.

"I had no leads. I had nothing in the fire until this thing appeared in the paper," he said.

After several employers contacted him, Corriveau accepted a bus driver's job with Greyhound.

Newspapers themselves are facing some of the toughest times they've seen in years.

The recession has cut into advertising revenue, depressing profits and forcing many papers to trim payrolls.

Experts say the free ad programs can be costly. The Globe estimates its program cost about $60,000.

The Blade-Citizen, in Oceanside, Calif., ran hundreds of free job-wanted ads earlier this year, but probably won't do it again, said Ira Rosenthal, manager of classified advertising.

The business is just not out there for us to go out there and play philanthroper," Rosenthal said.

Barry Haselden, classified advertising manager for The Orlando Sentinel, said his newspaper considered offering the free ads but decided against it.

He said it would be too hard to screen the ads to make sure they were from people without jobs.

The expenditure can pay off for newspapers by showing readers and employers the usefulness of classified advertising, said JoAnn Gocking, executive director of the Association of Newspaper Classified Advertising Managers.

Stan Erickson, general manager for The Journal of Commerce in New York, said simply: "Classified begets classified."

His newspaper has run free position-wanted ads each of the past five years around Thanksgiving.

"We did it altruistically," he said, "but we found it was useful from a business side."

Engineers plug leaky tunnels; business opens

CHICAGO (AP) — After six days, engineers plugged the tunnel leak under the Chicago River that caused an underground flood and virtually shut down business in the heart of the city, officials said Sunday.

Business in the Loop, the downtown business district, was expected to resume Monday, a week after flooding inundated basements and forced officials to cut power to some of the nation's largest buildings.

"Most Loop businesses will be able to reopen," said Billy Davis, an aide to Mayor Richard M. Daley.

The last leak in the century-old system of tunnels below the Loop was plugged with concrete late Saturday. Further work to seal the plug went on Sunday.

Pumping was to begin once engineers were sure the plugs had solidified completely.

After a tunnel wall gave way last Monday, more than 250 millions gallons of river water poured into the 50-mile underground network and into basements.

Once used to deliver coal, mail and freight, the system now houses electric cables serving downtown businesses.

The flood forced about 200,000 people to evacuate scores of buildings, including the Chicago Board of Trade, where there was an unprecedented two-day shutdown in commodities trading.

Two sections of the city subway system remain closed. The financial loss that drained from the city and its businesses remains untold.

Poll: Utahns favor Bush; Clinton, Perot earn tie

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — George Bush is favored by a bare majority of Utahns in this year's presidential campaign, while Democrat Bill Clinton and independent Ross Perot are tied, according to a new public opinion survey.

The Republican incumbent had 53 percent support among respondents who were asked in late March who they would vote for if the election were held that day.

The copyright Deseret News-KSL-TV poll of 601 people was published Sunday and conducted March 30-31. It had an error margin of plus or minus 4 percent.

Pollster Dan Jones & Associates found that Clinton and Perot each were favored by 17 percent of those polled. Eight percent didn't know, 4 percent said they would not vote and 1 percent mentioned another name.

Perot, a Texas billionaire, says he will run for president if volunteers get his name on the ballot in 50 states. In Utah, the movement has collected more than 3,000 signatures, despite needing only 300 to put Perot's name on the ballot in November.

In a year of many dissatisfied voters, Perot got 10 percent preference from Republican respondents, 16 percent among Democrats and 26 percent among independents.

Bush, however, ran ahead in all age groups and, among Mormon respondents, received 62 percent support. Catholics preferred Clinton and Perot — 29 percent each — to Bush's 26 percent, Jones found.

National polls have suggested that Bush has more favor among men than women, but in Utah, 52 percent of the men and 55 percent of the women questioned support him.

For Clinton, it was 18 percent among men and 16 percent among women, while Perot got 20 percent support from men and 14 percent from women.

Caterpillar awaits workers return

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Thousands of United Auto Workers will carry lunch buckets, not picket signs, to Caterpillar Inc. this week for the first time in months. But no one expects a warm welcome back.

"It's not going to be 'happy valley' in those plants," said Ronald Peters, a professor of labor at the University of Illinois. "My guess, the workers will be pretty angry.

"They are going back without much to show after five months on strike," Peters said Friday.

Federal mediators announced Tuesday the union was ending its strike without conditions and would resume negotiations with Caterpillar.

After five winter months on picket lines, drawing $100 a week instead of their average $680 in wages, many union members wondered why they sacrificed for so long.

Several times before, union leaders had rejected the company's offer to work while they negotiate. Suddenly and without explanation, the union gave in.

City Council to discuss subdivision annexation

TWIN FALLS – Annexation of a 21-acre subdivision-in-northeastern-Twin Falls tops the agenda for the Twin Falls City Council tonight.

At its regular bi-monthly Monday meeting at City Hall, the council will hold a public hearing on developer Devoe Brown's petition for the city to annex Buckingham Gardens Subdivision, located north of Stadium Boulevard, east of Eastland Drive and west of College Drive.

The Twin Falls Planning and Zoning Commission has recommended annexation.

Also on the agenda for the 6 p.m. session are a request by the Downtown Business Improvement District for a change in zoning laws to permit small, free-standing, A-frame-type signs, extension of sewer services to the commercial real estate development on Bridgeview Drive across from the Magic Valley Mall and other housekeeping matters.

Senator plans town meeting tonight at CSI Aspen Building

TWIN FALLS – U.S. Sen. Larry Craig will hold a town meeting tonight on the campus of the College of Southern Idaho.

The meeting is scheduled for 7 p.m. in Room 108 of the Aspen Building.

"Town meetings are one of the best ways I know to stay in touch with the real concerns of Idahoans," the Idaho Republican said. "Polls don't tell you what's really on people's minds. Face-to-face meetings do."

The session is open to the public.

Magic Valley Right to Life to meet at KMVT building

Later Tuesday they will hold their regular monthly school board meeting at 7:30 p.m. at the central office building.

Some of the items on the agenda will be a report from the high school computer media center, approval of the plant facility budget and bids for construction of additions onto Big Valley Elementary and Minico High School.

Blaine County Sheriff's Office seeks master plan consultant

HAILEY – The Blaine County Sheriff's Office is advertising for a consultant to prepare a "Corrections Assessment and Master Plan" for the Blaine County Jail.

"We're starting over from ground one," said Sheriff Walt Femling about the new study, which won approval from the Blaine County Commissioners on Monday.

In 1990, an independent citizens' committee studied Blaine County's jail situation for several months before proposing a $4.6 million bond issue for a new 77-bed facility. That bond was rejected by a majority of voters in November, 1990.

In the meantime, the jail's conditions have continued to draw complaints, including a 1991 lawsuit by the American Civil Liberties Union.

"This time we've decided to go with an outside professional consultant, rather than a committee," Femling explained.

The consultant will be asked to evaluate the existing facility, profile its prisoners, examine trends, forecast future populations and provide facility options for the county to pursue.

Idaho accelerates trend to being trade state

The Times-News and The Associated Press

TWIN FALLS – Only one of every 10 new nonfarm jobs in Idaho last year was created in the goods-producing sector as the state continued shifting its job base into trade and services.

"As has typically been the case, the number of workers rose at a faster rate in the service-producing sector," Department of Employment analysts said in their assessment of 1991's job picture. "Services, retail trade and state and local government had the largest numeric gains in employment in this sector, showing a significant job gain for the fourth straight year."

Anchored specifically by trade and direct service jobs, the sector was the major reason total nonfarm employment in Idaho rose by nearly 13,000 jobs last year to nearly match the expansion in the state's labor force.

Since Idaho's economic recovery began in 1987, nonfarm employment has jumped by nearly 65,000 but nearly 50,000 of those jobs have been generated by the service sector.

And analysts said the continuing influx of people into the state will fuel further growth in trade and direct services although

Collector has enough pens, pencils for Jerome County

By H.R. Weixel
Times-News correspondent

Better sharpen your pencils if you hope to keep up with Rick Mitchell.

This Jerome man is true to an old but popular journalism saying: scratch him and he will bleed ink – or lead.

Mitchell has stashed away an amazing storehouse of writing implements – a monumental 15,000 pens and pencils – or enough to supply one to every person in Jerome County.

The collection is jumbled into barrels and boxes, while some are on display at the home of the collector's daughter, Melodie Mitchell of Jerome.

Mitchell is proud to say none of the pens or pencils duplicate another one, while all bear the inscription of their maker or advertiser.

"The most valuable pen I have is one with President Bush's signature and the presidential seal on it, he said. "My next most valuable pen is one from Russia when Russia wasn't even a country yet."

A pencil from the World War II era with the inscription "Hall Bros., Des Moines, Iowa," and an imprint of a team of mules is the oldest in Mitchell's collection.

Some items in his collection are oddly shaped and were designed to look like something else.

One pen looks like a gun, and the pen tip flies out when the trigger is pulled.

"I have one pen I don't show because it has 'Mable's Whore House' incribed on it," he said.

Mitchell began collecting the writing implements more than 30 years ago when he worked as a chef with the Holiday Inn.

2 Burley teachers hope student interest in science sprouts from Nature Center

By Vickie Higgins
Times-News correspondent

'Science can be boring when all the kids do is read about it in a book.'

— Jeannie Jensen, Dworshak Elementary School teacher

BURLEY – Two Burley teachers are helping students get a little dirt under their fingernails and hoping along the way to turn their charges into some pretty impressive green thumbs.

The teachers – Jeannie Jensen and Carolyn Hondo – have gone so far as to obtain a $10,000 state grant – to build a Nature Center at Dworshak Elementary School.

Through the Idaho Department of Education grant, every child at the school will be putting something green into the ground to nourish that will also help nourish some of the underpriviledged children along the way.

A large percentage of the students are from lower income backgrounds, the teachers said, and many students simply aren't aware of the world and how things grow.

"They are growing up away from the farm and in a lot of cases, there isn't a lot of stimulation at home," Hondo said.

Even so, Jensen says she and fellow educators at the school primarily just hoped to make science a little less dull, when they set out to build a full-fledged greenhouse and showy planting area full of trees, bushes and blooming flowers.

"Science can be boring when all the kids do is read about it in a book," Jensen said.

The Nature Center is starting to take shape this week – appropriately enough as the country celebrates Earth Week – as children began scurrying around the school grounds this Saturday, planting some of their greenery.

The center contains a greenhouse and several outside plots which include a garden, a wild area, a desert area and an area with only native Idaho plants and a pond.

Shrubs, flowers and trees including fruit trees are among the green things to be planted in the 50- by 75-foot area, Hondo said.

The native plants will include 540 seedlings from the University of Idaho, and the garden will include both flowers and vegetables, Jensen said.

Hondo, who wrote the grant, credits Jensen with spearheading the project that so far has generated a lot of community support.

Shop students at Burley High School built the greenhouse, and Dennis Bunn of Bunn Fence Co. built the fence for what it cost him. The teachers also bought a compost-maker with some of the grant money, Jensen said.

Members of the parent-teacher organization have volunteered time to help with tilling the soil and laying walkways, and the school cooks donated some plants, she said.

The teachers applied for the grant during the 1990-91 school year and have until May to complete the work. It was the only grant of its kind awarded to a school in Cassia County last year, Jensen said.

The money also will go toward innovative programs involving science and math programs in the schools, the teachers said.

Don't look now, but Magic Valley is starting to move left

Drew DeSilver
Politics

Welcome to the Magic Valley, Idaho's liberal heartland.

What's that, you say? Doesn't the eight-county area have a reputation as one of the most staunchly conservative regions in Idaho?

Yes, it does. But a recently released survey by Boise State University suggests that, virtually unnoticed, Magic Valley residents have been moving leftward, at least on some issues.

BSU's Survey Research Center interviewed 809 Idahoans, including 113 Magic Valley residents, last November on various policy issues. Some of the results were rather surprising.

For instance, 65 percent of the sample said they favored handgun registration, and 71 percent said they favored banning assault rifles. That may mean the stereotypical attitude of Idahoans toward gun control ("You can take my gun when you pry it from my cold, dead fingers") needs revision.

What's really interesting, though, is that 70 percent of Valley respondents favored handgun registration, and 75 percent favored banning assault rifles. Only Panhandle residents were more likely to favor those gun control measures.

The survey also found that 23 percent of the sample favored the property-tax-slashing I-Percent Initiative, 20 percent opposed it, 25 percent didn't know about it and 32 percent had no opinion.

When only people who knew about the I-Percent and had an opinion on it were considered, 45 percent of valley respondents supported it and 55 percent opposed it. In every other region of the state, except the Upper Snake River Valley, majorities supported the initiative.

True, only 40 Magic Valley people in the sample both knew about the I Percent and had an opinion on it. But that translates to only 18 out of 113 area residents backing the initiative, suggesting that it may have far less support than is commonly supposed.

The BSU pollsters also asked people how they would manage Idaho's natural resources if they had to choose between emphasizing economic growth or protecting the environment. 63 percent of Magic Valley respondents said they would choose the environment – the highest percentage among Idaho's regions. 19 percent picked the economy, and 18 percent said they would try to do both.

Statewide, 54 percent of respondents said they would protect the economy, 26 percent said they would make the economy grow, and 18 percent said they would try to do both.

The lowest percentages favoring the environment, by the way, were in eastern Idaho. Even there, though, less than a third of the people surveyed said unequivocally that they would put the economy over the environment.

Before anyone starts drawing conclusions that Magic Valley residents are ready to join The Sierra Club and subscribe to The New Republic en masse, a few words of caution are in order.

Although the survey as a whole has a margin of error of 3.4 percentage points, the error for regional subgroups may be larger because of the smaller sample.

Also, it's possible (though not likely) that the Magic Valley sample included a higher proportion of Blaine County residents than they represent in the Valley as a whole. Blainers tend to be more liberal than their brethren closer to the Snake River.

Still, the survey suggests that the Magic Valley, and Idaho as a whole, may not be as deeply and consistently conservative as the conventional wisdom has it. It'll be interesting to see if this year's primary and general election results confirm or contradict the BSU findings.

Ski resorts caught up in paper chase with federal government

By Kirk Mitchell
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Some ski resort managers say they don't have a problem paying leasing fees for national forest lands they use.

It's figuring out what they owe that is the problem.

Under the current formula, fees that each resort pays the Forest Service vary and can depend on the income of facilities – such as bars or hot dog stands – associated with the resort, even if the facility is on privately owned land.

Fees also may be reduced during a certain year if the resort buys new equipment, such as a chair lift.

"It is almost impossible to get a consistent understanding of that document," Michael Collins, president of The Big Mountain of Whitefish, Mont., told States News Service. Collins estimates the administrator of his resort spends between two and three weeks a year figuring out how much the resort owes in leasing fees.

"Ski resort operators currently face an extraordinarily complex, 40-page calculation concerning their special use permit fees," said U.S. Rep. Pat Williams, D-Mont., who is spearheading legislative efforts to drastically simplify the formula for rental fees.

"Like the income tax, it is progressive," Williams said of his plan. Under the bill, smaller ski resorts would pay a lower percentage fee than resorts in "the top bracket."

But Claude Hinkle, president and part-owner of Soldier Mountain Ski Area near Fairfield, said Williams' time would be better spent trying to reduce the complexity of filing federal income tax forms.

Hinkle said the formula for determining his lease in the Sawtooth National Forest – which costs the company between 2 percent to 5 percent of gross revenue per year – is not too complicated.

"I have no complaints about the money we pay," he said. "Of course, being a businessman, I would rather pay less. In general, I would say it is somewhat fair."

One way he would adjust the formula – which depends on revenue – would be to lower the fee for poor years, Hinkle said. He said during the drought the past five years, Soldier Mountain has had only 30 percent to 50 percent of its normal business.

But Tim Prather, general manager of Montana's Red Lodge ski resort, said the formula is not working.

"I think the current system stinks," he told States. "It's got to be simplified."

Prather, who says his "low-to-medium-sized" resort grosses about $2.5 million a year, says if the formula is revamped, his resort would save between $1,000 and $2,000 the first year that the new system goes into effect. After that, however, he estimates paying more in rental fees than he pays under the current system, which has been anywhere from $20,000 to $30,000 a year during the past 10 years.

Some other ski resort owners agree that the new system may cost them more money, but savings could be gained in other ways.

The new system "would cost us significantly more dollars," said Dennis Harmon, president of the Heavenly Valley Ski Resort, located on the California-Nevada border.

Harmon, who describes his resort as one of the largest 15 in the nation, says although he estimates his fees would increase between $50,000 and $60,000 per year, the stability brought by the bill would more than compensate for the increased charges.

Williams says his bill is intended to be "revenue neutral," with the government collecting the same amount of money under the new system they would have garnered under the old formula.

Crews plan to construct approach slabs to bridges on Idaho 75

SHOSHONE – Work on two new bridges near the North Fork Store on Idaho 75 north of Ketchum is nearing completion.

Crews will be constructing concrete approach slabs at the ends of each bridge and placing gabions, wire baskets filled with rocks, at the northern bridge.

These baskets will be stacked to create a wall to hold loosened dirt out of the Big Wood River at the site.

Crews will also do some paving at each site.

The contractor, Idaho Construction Co., will restrict traffic to one lane with a posted speed of 35 mph during the work to construct the bridge approaches. The $1.1 million project will be completed by June.

Trade

probably again not at a rate that will keep job opportunities apace the expanding labor force.

After exceeding 500,000 for the first time in history in 1991, the department projects continued growth in the coming year.

"People will continue to move to Idaho because it appears to be a land of opportunity as well as a terrific place to live," analysts said in their assessment.

That trend should add another 7,000 people to the civilian work force. But, the analysts said, "in times of a slow growing economy, the number of jobs available grows at a slower rate than the population. It is anticipated that of the 7,000 new people in the labor force, only half will find jobs."

Direct services and trade should provide another 6,700 new jobs this year, the department projected. But nearly half that number will be offset by further declines in other sectors.

Idaho's two traditional resource-based cornerstones – timber and mining – have been hard hit in the last several years, countering the positive trend in the rest of the economy. Mining employment was down 20 percent last year while timber jobs were off 10 percent, and analysts said the outlook for this year remains gloomy. One private economist predicted earlier this year that mining will never again achieve the major economic role it previously played in Idaho.

That situation was reflected in county unemployment rates last year. Resource-reliant counties like Adams, Benewah, Bonner, Clearwater, Idaho, Lemhi and Shoshone all posted double-digit jobless rates. And Shoshone County in the heart if the Panhandle's silver mining district had the highest rate at 19.5 percent.

But while the more slowly expanding state economy was unable to keep up with the influx of new workers last year, allowing average unemployment to rise to 6.1 percent, 17 of the 44 counties saw their average jobless rate decline.

traveling all over the Midwest and East.

He just took a fondness to pens and pencils for no particular reason, says his friend Millie Mitchell.

Mitchell is so fond of his collection he has turned some of them into useful items, including a lamp from a group of pens and a small log cabin that required 278 pens to complete.

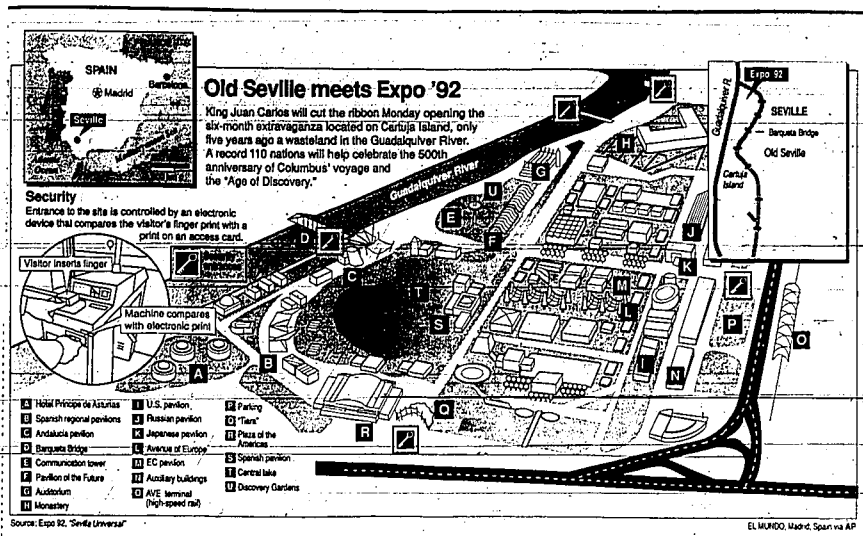

"It soon fell apart, though," Mitchell said.

Many of the items in Mitchell's storehouse came from friends, and he adds he still picks up new additions whenever he comes across an item not in his collection.

"I'm still stealing them once in awhile," he said.

Mitchell calls his collection priceless, adding he has no idea of its real value.

"They're not worth anything to anybody unless you found somebody else who wanted them," he said.

EC threatens to halt Bosnia peace mission

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Fighting raged at both ends of Bosnia-Herzegovina on Sunday, and a European Community official said he would recommend the EC suspend its peace mission in the former Yugoslav republic.

The development came a day after Portugal, the EC's president, said the 12-nation community was considering reimposing economic sanctions on Serbia.

The EC and the United States have grown increasingly critical of Serbia, accusing it and the Serb-dominated federal army of fomenting violence in Bosnia. Several hundred people have died since a referendum approved independence for the republic on Feb. 29.

Bosnia has three major ethnic groups — Serbs, Croats and Muslims. Serbs want their areas to remain part of Yugoslavia, while the Muslims and Croats, who supported independence, oppose breaking up the republic.

Fighting among the ethnic groups was reported Sunday at Mostar and Neum in the south and at Bosanski Brod in the north. At Mostar, the Serb-led federal army reportedly shelled the historic city, demanding the release of three Yugoslav pilots allegedly captured by Croats.

There were no reports of casualties.

Sarajevo, the capital, was quiet but wary as Roman Catholic Croats, who account for about one-sixth of city's 600,000 people, celebrated Easter.

Hundreds jammed the city's Gothic cathedral to hear an appeal for peace by the Rev. Vinko Puljic, head of the Catholic church in Bosnia. Armed civilians stood guard outside.

"I call for everyone to give us a peaceful Easter," Puljic said. "We need someone to help us."

Zdenka Kusic, a Croat housewife, echoed the wish. "The people should stop killing each other," she said, as she left the church.

Air raid alarms disrupted an open-air Mass in Medugorje, a predominantly Croat town just south of Mostar where Catholics from across the world congregated in peacetime to pray to the Virgin Mary. Worshipers scurried to shelters and listened to a piped-in sermon until the all-clear sounded.

Disheartened by the continuing fighting, EC envoy Colin Doyle told reporters in Sarajevo that he would recommend to his superiors that the EC halt the peace talks it has sponsored among Bosnia's three main ethnic groups.

About 40 EC observers are deployed in Bosnia, and the community has been a key mediator in trying to find a peaceful resolution of Bosnia's secession.

"People are still killing each other. There is no point of talks in such conditions," Doyle said.

Serb fighters and the federal army have been seizing territory across Bosnia, apparently with the idea of linking it to neighboring Serbia. Bosnian Croats and some from Croatia have also been fighting for land in southern Bosnia, near Croatia's Adriatic coast.

The United States and the EC have recognized the independence of Bosnia and two other former Yugoslav republics, Croatia and Slovenia. On Saturday, Serbia accused the United States of siding with Muslims and Croats in the Yugoslav crisis.

Spain's coming out party begins today

SEVILLE, Spain (AP) — Laborers and officials worked into the night Sunday putting the final touches on Expo '92, a mammoth world exposition that marks Spain's formal coming out into the high-tech, democratic world.

Expo '92 Commissioner Emilio Cassinello called the exposition "a magnificent occasion for us to present ourselves to the world as a European country capable of efficiently organizing major events."

But the government still must contend with threats of attacks by Basque separatists during the six-month exposition.

Cassinello told reporters everything humanly possible had been done "to avoid the inhuman, terrorist attack."

The Basque Separatist Group ETA, which is waging an armed campaign for independence for the three-province Spanish Basque region, has targeted Expo '92 and the Barcelona Summer Olympics. The government has deployed 10,000 security personnel to guard the exposition.

On noon Monday, King Juan Carlos was to cut the ribbon in front of the 15th century Santa Maria de las Cuevas monastery, the heart of the 531-acre Expo site on Cartuja Island in the Guadalquivir River across from downtown Seville.

Until the expo closes Oct. 12, Spaniards hope the world will see how far they've come on the 500th anniversary of Christopher Columbus's first voyage to the New World, especially their progress in democracy following the death of Gen. Francisco Franco in 1975.

The victor in Spain's bloody 1936-39 civil war ruled the country with an iron hand for 36 years.

The 55-year-old monarch first proposed that Spain host a world exposition in March 1976, less than a year after he succeeded Franco as head of state.

On Sunday, Juan Carlos and Queen Sofia marked the 500th anniversary of the signing of the contract between Columbus and King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella that confirmed Spain as the driving force behind the age of discovery.

Expo '92 features pavilions or exhibit spaces representing 110 nations, 23 international organizations, Spain's 17 autonomous regions and 30 businesses. It also has four theme pavilions on history, communications and the future, and acres of parks and gardens.

Spain has invested $10 billion in Seville and in the surrounding region of Andalucia to improve roads, airports and bridges. And on Tuesday, it will inaugurate the country's first high-speed rail link between Madrid and Seville.

Reports claim tanker leaks oil

MAPUTO, Mozambique (AP) — Leaking oil from a grounded tanker has fouled beaches in Mozambique, and the vessel was in danger of breaking apart, a report said Sunday.

Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Service said the Maltese-registered Katina P had lost all the oil from at least one tank, but the London-based group did not give on estimate on the amount of oil spilled.

Mozambican authorities and South African salvage experts said none of the oil had spilled, and that ships were being sent to the area to try to transfer the oil.

The vessel was carrying 19.4 million gallons of oil when it ran aground on a sandbar in heavy seas late Thursday about 30 miles north of Maputo, officials said. No injuries were reported.

The tanker was carrying almost double the amount of oil spilled from the tanker Exxon Valdez, which lost 10.92 million gallons of crude into Prince William Sound in Alaska in 1989.

South African leaders call for peace at joint appearance

MORIA, South Africa (AP) — President F.W. de Klerk and rival black leaders Nelson Mandela and Mangosuthu Buthelezi called for peace during a rare joint appearance Sunday at an Easter service attended by a half-million people.

The appearance was part of a campaign to gain support for constitutional negotiations on ending white-minority rule and holding multiracial elections, expected by the end of next year.

De Klerk, Mandela, head of the African National Congress; and Buthelezi, leader of the Inkatha Freedom Party, appeared at a service held by the Zion Christian Church, which is thought to be the nation's largest black denomination.

The church calls itself non-political, but with more than 2 million members it is considered a potentially potent voting force when blacks take part in elections for the first time.

De Klerk, Mandela and Buthelezi last appeared together at the signing of a national peace accord in September. The accord was designed to halt factional violence in black townships that has killed thousands in recent years, but the fighting has continued.

Much of the fighting is blamed on a power struggle between the ANC and Inkatha, the two main black opposition groups. Both oppose apartheid but have deep ideological and tribal differences.

Police said 10 people were killed Sunday in the latest factional fighting, including eight shot to death in a home in the Sharpeville township south of Johannesburg.

8 die, 1 injured in shooting attack

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Eight people died in a shooting attack at a house in the Sharpeville black township on Easter Sunday, police said.

Capt. Piet van Deventer said unidentified attackers armed with assault rifles and handguns entered a house in the township south of Johannesburg, ordered the occupants into a bedroom and opened fire.

Four men and four women were slain, and one person was injured, he said.

Van Deventer said investigating officers were stoned by a crowd that gathered at the house, but left the area unharmed.

Ex-chess champ ties after 5 rounds

LINARES, Spain (AP) — Former world champion Anatoly Karpov of Russia and Briton Nigel Short completed two adjourned matches on Sunday, leaving the two tied with 2.5 points after five rounds of play in the Candidates Tournament chess semifinals.

In a sixth-round semifinal Sunday, Jan Timman of the Netherlands — playing white — defeated Russian Artur Yusupov after 52 moves to even their series. Each player has 3.0 points after six matches.

Short, moving first, needed 76 moves to defeat Karpov in their fourth-round match. The match was adjourned Thursday after 60 moves.

The two played to a draw after 67 moves in their fifth-round match. The game, with Karpov playing first, was adjourned Saturday after 61 moves.

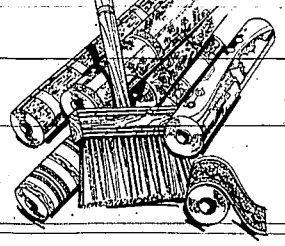

Players receive 1.0 points for a victory and 0.5 for a draw.

The winners of the Karpov-Short and Timman-Yusupov semifinals will play in January for the right to face World Champion Garri Kasparov of Russia.

West wins McDonald's All-American game

ATLANTA – Othella Harrington, a 6-9½ center from Jackson, Miss., scored 19 points and pulled down 21 rebounds to lead the West to a 100-85 victory over the East Sunday in the McDonald's All-American High School Basketball Game.

Harrington, presented the John Wooden Award as most valuable player, made 9 of 14 field goal shots and had three steals.

"I was very fortunate today," he said. "The team did an outstanding job of giving me the ball."

Jason Kidd of Alameda, Calif., the national player of the year on several All-American teams, added 12 points and seven assists for the West. Billy Owens of Russellville, Ark., had 14 points and 10 rebounds. Chris Davis of Oak Hill Academy in Virginia, added 12 points.

Top scorer for the East was Carlos Strong of Athens, with 19 points. Michael Lloyd of Dunbar, Md., had 17 points and five assists.

Richard Keene hit a 3-pointer to give the West a 37-36 lead 4:13 before halftime and the East never caught up. The West outscored the East 11-2 in the final three minutes of the half, for a 50-40 halftime lead.

Cards manager bans foes from clubhouse after fight

ST. LOUIS – St. Louis Cardinals manager Joe Torre on Sunday banned opposing players from the clubhouse, a day after two of his players came to blows over the subject.

On Saturday, relief pitcher Todd Worrell and first baseman Pedro Guerrero each threw a couple of punches after Guerrero brought the Cubs' Sammy Sosa into the clubhouse about a half-hour after Chicago's 5-4 victory.

Torre held a team meeting before Sunday's game to announce that fraternization would not be tolerated.

"There just won't be people coming in this clubhouse," Torre said.

Utility player Rex Hudler, who also had objected to Sosa being in the clubhouse, was all for the rule.

"Anyone else comes in here again, they're free game," Hudler said. "Open season, baby."

2-time Olympian earns 3rd berth in flatwater sprint race

RALEIGH, N.C. – Two berths on the United States Olympic Team were filled as the Olympic Trials for Flatwater Sprint Racing continued Saturday.

Jim Terrell of El Toro, Calif., a two-time Olympian in men's canoeing, earned his third berth by winning the men's single canoe 500-meter race in 1 minute 58.52 seconds. Terrell edged Fred Spaulding of Costa Mesa, Calif., who led by a meter with 25 meters remaining, but faltered to allow Terrell to streak past for the win.

2-man best ball leaders coast to championship

The Times-News

TWIN FALLS – Joe Malay and Lynn Reiersgord broke it wide open on the first two holes Sunday, coasting into the Cove-Rock Creek two-man bestball championship.

Malay, from Weiser, and Reiersgord, Jackpot, had worked the wind and field for a two-stroke lead in Saturday's windblown opening round.

But when runners-up Jason Meyerhoeffer and Bob Adamson, both Twin Falls, went par-bogey to open Sunday's finale, the championship duo jumped into a four-stroke lead. That grew to 10 strokes by the end of the day.

"It went from two and close to four and cruising on those first two," said Malay.

"I three putted the first hole for a par and we both three putted the second for a bogey," said Meyerhoeffer. "That pretty much was it. But we could have played very well and still been second. We would have had to play great to beat them."

Malay and Reiersgord tacked a seven-under 61 to their first day 60 to end with a 121, 10 ahead of Meyerhoeffer and Adamson with Burley's duo of Glenn Blakeley and Ken Huizinga third at 133.

Meanwhile, Jay Bride knocked a 150-yard second shot into the cup for a net hole-in-one on No. 16 – considered the course's toughest hole – to pulled himself and teammate Ed Fuchs into a tie for net honors with Orville and Orville Kemper, Sr., and Jr., at 120.

Rosemary McRoberts and Virginia Undhjem dominated the gross division in the women's flight with a 145, winning by 19 shots over runners-up Linda Fennen and Oleta Roberts. Marcia Lanting and Lucy Hall won net at 136, eight shots ahead of Vinie Standley and Linda Ritchie.

Trevino takes windswept Seniors

The Associated Press

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. – Lee Trevino won the PGA Seniors Championship on Sunday because he's Lee Trevino.

That was the estimate of Mike Hill, who finished one shot back after Trevino made critical, par-saving putts on the final two holes at windswept PGA National.

"If it hadn't been Lee Trevino ," Hill said before adding, "I don't think there are very many people who would make those putts.

"He's made them when he's had to for a long time. He's a great champion. People who win major championships make them when they have to."

The putts were a 10-12 footer for par on the 17th, and an eight-footer on the 18th.

In each case, the tournament lead was on the line.

In each case, Trevino ran the putts into the back of the cup.

"I was more confident of the putt on 17 than I was on 18, because the grain was with me," Trevino said.

Trevino, who announced he's looking for a duplicate of his banner season of 1990, salvaged a 1-under-par 71 from the water and won this one by a single stroke at 278, 10-under par.

The victory was his third of the season – no one else on the over-50 circuit has won more than once – his second in as many starts and his 13th since joining the senior tour two years ago.

It was worth $100,000 from the total purse of $700,000 and pushed his earnings for the season to a leading $397,299.

"I knew it was going to come down to those last four holes," Trevino said. That's what this tournament is all about. They talk about Amen Corner. It's got nothing on these last four holes."

Hill, playing with Trevino in the final threesome, missed only one green in a round of 69 and was second alone at 279.

"In a way, I'd almost rather be third or fourth," Hill said. "When you're second, you always can look back and see where you could save a stroke or two.

"But when you've played as well as you can, you can't complain."

Hot goalie backstops Rangers over Devils

The Associated Press

NEW YORK – The New York Rangers got another strong performance from goaltender John Vanbiesbrouck and their defense, beating the New Jersey Devils 2-1 Sunday night in the opener of their first-round playoff series.

NHL playoffs

Darren Turcotte and Mike Gartner scored a goal each as the Rangers, meeting the Devils for the first time in the playoffs, took the lead in the best-of-7 Patrick Division series.

Vanbiesbrouck, the NHL's hottest goaltender at the end of the regular season with a league-leading 1.91 goals-against average, made 26 saves, and was at his best in the second period with the Rangers clinging to a 1-0 lead. Vanbiesbrouck made two great saves on shots in front of the net by Tom Chorske and Laurie Boschman. Later Vanbiesbrouck blunted a shot by Randy McKay, then swept it away as it trickled toward the goal line.

Capitals 3, Penguins 1

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) – Don Beaupre stopped 32 shots and Peter Bondra scored twice as Washington beat the defending Stanley Cup champions in the opening game of the Patrick Division series.

The Penguins played without Mario Lemieux, scratched with a bruised right shoulder. Lemieux had an NHL-high 131 points this season

CSI thumps North Idaho

The Times-News

COEUR d'ALENE – Mike Bearnson walloped his fifth homerun of the season and Nate Tebbs and Boomer Walker furnished three hits apiece Sunday as the College of Southern Idaho demolished North Idaho 17–0 in five innings.

"Mike Bearson's was a mammoth homerun," said CSI Coach Jim Walker. "That made it 5–0 in the first inning. Tebbs had an inside-the-park homer later, but they gave the fielder an error because the ball went off his glove, then he sprained his ankle."

CSI, whose Craig Sands and Ryan Hall – the latter with a run-producing double – each contributed a pair of hits to the Eagle's 16–hit attack, jumped to an 8-0 advantage in their first at bat and were never threatened.

Southpaw Mark Kaip, a freshman out of Pocatello's Highland High School, went all the way in recording his fifth victory of the season.

"We just hit everything hard," Walker said. "Not that the pitching was any better. We just got a little motivation. Defensively, we never let North Idaho out of the saddle. They got five hits and we turned three double plays to choke them off."

The College of Southern Idaho, 29–14 overall and which improved its Region 18 Northern Division slate to 8–1, is idle until Friday when they begin a 3–game regional series against Treasure Valley in Ontario, Oregon.

North Idaho's Cardinals, 16–16 in all games, slipped to 3–6 in league with the loss.

'Chief' helps Celtics take division title

The Associated Press

BOSTON – The Boston Celtics capped a late-season surge to their 14th Atlantic Division title in 20 years, beating the Miami Heat 109-93 Sunday for their eighth consecutive victory without ailing Larry Bird.

Boston trailed the New York Knicks for nearly the entire season. Only in the last two weeks — and without Bird — did the Celtics challenge, then pass New York. The Celtics completed a comeback from five games behind New York with eight games to play and tied the Knicks with a 51-31 record. Boston finishes first because it beat New York 3-2 in the season series.

The Celtics again will play Indiana, which pushed them to the maximum five games last season, in the first round of the playoffs. Bird is expected back from back problems.

Robert Parish had 22 points and 19 rebounds while Reggie Lewis scored 22 points for the Celtics.

Miami, which needed a victory to clinch its first playoff berth in history, was led by Glen Rice with 34 points.

Bulls 103, Pistons 85

CHICAGO – Michael Jordan scored 32 points and Chicago closed its most successful campaign with a rout of Detroit.

Jordan, who was treated after the game for a lower back strain, finished with a 30-plus-average-for-his-sixth-straight-NBA scoring title, and the Bulls finished with a 67-15 record, best in franchise history.

Jordan said he would be ready when the Bulls, seeking a second straight NBA crown, open the playoffs at home Friday night and Sunday.

Suns 100, Rockets 97

HOUSTON – Houston, despite 39 points, 16 rebounds and seven blocked shots from Hakeem Olajuwon, couldn't overcome six Phoenix players in double figures and failed to clinch a playoff berth.

The Rockets, who have reached the playoffs seven straight years, could have sealed a postseason spot with a victory in any of their last three games, but lost all three. Houston needed a loss by the Los Angeles Lakers to the Los Angeles Clippers later Sunday night to make it.

Jazz 101, Spurs 90

SAN ANTONIO – Karl Malone scored 34 points and Utah limited San Antonio to a season-low 14 points in the fourth quarter.

The Jazz clinched homecourt advantage through two rounds of the Western Conference playoffs with the victory.

John Stockton had 17 points and 21 assists for the Jazz, who won the Midwest Division by eight games and play the Los Angeles Clippers in the first round. Terry Cummings led the Spurs, who wound up as the fifth-seed in the West, with 21 points, while Rod Strickland had 16 points and 11 assists.

Pro basketball

Warriors 108, Sonics 106

OAKLAND, Calif. – Tim Hardaway scored 29 points in Golden State's victory over Seattle, setting up a rematch between the two teams in the opening round of the playoffs.

Playing without Chris Mullin, who was injured late in the third quarter, the Warriors held off the Sonics in the final minute, ensuring the two teams will meet in the first round. Had Seattle won, the Sonics would have played Utah, and the Warriors would have played San Antonio.

Timberwolves 130, Hornets 107

MINNEAPOLIS – Tony Campbell scored 23 points as Minnesota shot a franchise-record 57 percent, snapping a seven-game losing streak and finishing a troubled season with a victory over Charlotte.

An expansion team in 1989-90, the year after the Hornets came into the NBA, the Timberwolves went from 29 wins last season to a 15-67 record — the league's worst — in 1991-92. The Timberwolves also had the NBA's worst home record, 9-32, after going 21-20 at the Target Center last season.

Cavaliers 112, Hawks 108

RICHFIELD, Ohio – Atlanta was kept out of the NBA playoffs and Miami made them for the first time when the Cleveland Cavaliers beat the Hawks 112-108 Sunday night behind Mark Price's five points in the final 9.6 seconds.

The Hawks needed a win to make the playoffs for a seventh consecutive year, but Price doomed them by sinking a go-ahead 3-pointer with 9.6 seconds left and two clinching free throws in the final second.

Bucs batters bombard in-state rivals

PITTSBURGH (AP) – Gary Varsho hit an inside-the-park homer and Steve Buechele and Andy Van Slyke each had three hits as the Pittsburgh Pirates continued their best start in 26 years, beating the Philadelphia Phillies 11-0 Sunday for their sixth straight victory.

Buechele was 3 for 4 with three RBIs and Van Slyke was 3 for 3 and scored three runs as the Pirates improved to 9-2 for the first time since 1966..

National League

Giants 8, Reds 2

SAN FRANCISCO – John Burkett pitched eight strong innings as San Francisco beat Cincinnati to sweep the three-game series.

Burkett (1-1) retired the first 12 Reds and allowed only five singles in his eight innings, striking out three and walking none. Jeff Brantley finished.

Mets 11, Expos 6

MONTREAL – Howard Johnson, hitting .163 entering the game, put New York ahead with a three-run double in the seventh inning.

On the play, left fielder Ivan Calderon failed to field the carom off the left-field wall, allowing Johnson to also score to give the Mets a 7-4 lead. Montreal has committed 19 errors this season, including two in the fourth inning when the Mets took a 3-0 lead.

Cardinals 4, Cubs 3

ST. LOUIS – Jose DeLeon ended a long dry spell, winning his first game since last July as St. Louis defeated Chicago.

Astros 1, Padres 0

HOUSTON – Pete Incaviglia's run-scoring single with two out in the 11th inning lifted Houston over San Diego.

Red Sox come back in 9th to beat Blue Jays

BOSTON (AP) – Scott Cooper's strange single off the pitching rubber drove in the winning run with two outs in the ninth inning, capping a four-run rally Sunday that sent the Boston Red Sox past the Toronto Blue Jays 5-4.

Herm Winningham opened the ninth with a pinch-single off Tom Henke (1-1), Wade Boggs hit a one-out double and Jody Reed walked, loading the bases. First baseman Pat Tabler muffed Phil Plantier's grounder, allowing one run to score and leaving the bases loaded. Ellis Burks, but Mike Greenwell hit a two-run single on a 1-2 pitch, tying it at 4.

American League

White Sox 4, Twins 1

CHICAGO – Greg Hibbard extended his scoreless streak to 20 1-3 innings before needing late relief help and the Chicago White Sox sent Minnesota to its sixth loss in seven games.

Orioles 3, Tigers 2

BALTIMORE – Bob Milacki became the latest Baltimore pitcher to turn in a strong performance at the Orioles' new ballpark, stopping the Detroit Tigers on four hits over eight innings.

Yankees 5, Indians 3

NEW YORK – Danny Tartabull hit a go-ahead, two-run single in the sixth inning and the New York Yankees got another strong outing from a starter, beating the Cleveland Indians behind Jeff Johnson.

Rangers 6, Athletics 4

ARLINGTON, Texas – Kevin Reimer hit a two-run homer in the seventh inning, rallying the Texas Rangers over the Oakland Athletics.

Mariners 12, Brewers 9

MILWAUKEE – Ken Griffey Jr. drove in a career-high five runs and drew a pickoff throw that went wild in the eighth inning, allowing the go-ahead run to score and sending the Seattle Mariners to a wild victory over Milwaukee.

U.S. teen proves earlier gymnastics title was no fluke

PARIS (AP) – Kim Zmeskal, confirmed her status as the world's top women's gymnast as she won two titles as the World Gymnastics Championships ended Sunday.

The 16-year-old from Houston became a double winner Sunday when she upset defending champion Svetlana Boguinskaia in the balance beam after taking the floor exercise on Saturday.

"In the last couple of months I've done a lot more preparation. obviously improved each of the event," Zmeskal said. "All four events have been stronger than they were in September."

Zmeskal qualified for the finals in the uneven bars but the American coaches let two other Americans compete for the exposure. Zmeskal also bypassed the vault where she had a perfect 10 in the team event which helped the U.S. gained the silver medal behind the Soviet Union last year.

Zmeskal, 4-feet-7 and 80 pounds, won the all-around title last year to become the first American women's world champion. With Bela Karolyi as her coach, she will seek to follow the footsteps of his former pupils, Mary Lou Retton and Nadia Comaneci, to Olympic titles.

3rd time's a charm for Davis Love III

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) – Love conquered all. Again.

Davis Love III on Sunday became the first golfer to win the Heritage Classic three times and only the second to do so consecutively.

"It's a great feeling to win this three times, for sure," Love said. "But I think the biggest thing for me is getting two (victories) in one year.

"I've won one in a year a couple times. A lot of guys win one every year or one every couple of years. It sure feels great, especially this early in the year, to get two in one year."

Love shot a final-round 3-under-par 68 for a 72-hole total of 15-under 269 for a 4-stroke victory over Chip Beck at Harbour Town Golf Links.

Beck, who began the day four shots back, made a brief run on the backside, pulling within two strokes. Beck also shot a 68 for a 273.

"Davis played great, didn't he?" Beck said. "He's tough."

Nick Price was third at 274 after his second straight 66. Russ Cochran and Fuzzy Zoeller were at 275.

Mark O'Meara, who was in second three strokes back entering the final round, bogeyed the first hole and was never a factor. He was one of six players tied for sixth at 276.

America3 routs Stars & Stripes

SAN DIEGO (AP) – America3, making up for the race that wasn't, routed Dennis Conner's Stars & Stripes to win the first race of the America's Cup defender finals on Sunday.

America3 (America Cubed) rebounded from a bad start and extended its winning streak to six as it beat Stars & Stripes by 2 minutes, 9 seconds around the eight-leg, 20.03-mile Pacific Ocean course.

In the first race of the best-of-9 challenger final, New Zealand led wire to wire to beat Italy's mistake-prone Il Moro di Venezia by 1:32.

The winners of the two series will meet in the 28th America's Cup match beginning on May 9.

The opener of the best-of-13 defender finals was scheduled for Saturday. But it was abandoned because the wind died and neither yacht completed the third leg by the time limit of 2 hours, 13 minutes. America3 was well ahead of Stars & Stripes but still about 225 feet from rounding the mark when time expired.

There was enough wind on Sunday, and it favored America3. The wind was 8 knots from the west at the start and grew to 10-12 knots – more in America3's range than Stars & Stripes' – by the second leg.

First, though, America3 had to restart because it was over the line 10 seconds before the gun. On Saturday, Conner crossed the line early and had to restart.

CSI sprinters shine at ISU meet

By Jeff Hoskisson
Times-News writer

POCATELLO – The College of Southern Idaho continued its season long domination of the sprints Saturday at the ISU Invitational at Davis Field.

The Eagles claimed victories in the 100, 200 and 1600 meter relays. In addition they picked up a win in the triple jump in the seven school event.

Windy and rainy weather helped slow times in the sprints but in other events became little of a factor.

Wakeen Ponds took the 100 meter title by edging out Darin Stringer of Montana. Ponds recorded a time of 11.09 into a brisk breeze.

Richard Jones and Lonnie Rogers went one-two in the 200. Jones ran 21.96 for the win with Rogers running a 22.50.

Jones and Rogers teamed with Dennis Atkinson and Scott Miller to win the 1600 meter relay in a time of 3:18.65. The big leg on the relay was produced by Rogers who circled the track in 46.7 seconds.

Monyay Green picked up the other first place finish with a leap of 47 feet 5½ inches in the triple jump.

Despite the poor weather conditions Jon Biles, Roger Thomas, and Tia Woodfin turned excellant performances in the distance events. Biles just missed qualifying for the national meet in the 5,000. His time of 15:26 left him 11 seconds short.

Thomas stayed back in the pack early then made his move to the front in the 800. Thomas finished in fourth with a time of 1:53.24.

Woodfin, who has qualified for nationals in the 10,000, set a personal best of 11:37.0 in the 3,000.

The best finishes for the women were a second by Margaret Kielczewska in the shot, and thirds by Brandy Morrison and Dichele Bynum in the triple jump and 200.

Kielczewska threw the shot 43-½ for the runnerup spot. Morrison recorded a personal best of 36-5½ in the triple jump. Bynum finished third in 25.39 in the 200.

lead, made bogey from the water on the 15th hole and fell back to third at 70-280.

Dave Stockton, now a rookie on the senior circuit, was next at six shots back (284). He was followed by South Africans Gary Player at 285 and Harold Henning at 286.

Jack Nicklaus, the defending title-holder, struggled to a 40 on the back, shot 76 and finished at 291.

"I was just flat," Nicklaus said. "I got one good round out of it, and the rest of the way I was flat. I didn't want to be, but I was.

A 12-foot birdie putt on the 10th hole gave Trevino a one-stroke lead in his struggle with Hill and Rodriguez.

But Trevino followed immediately with a shot into the water on the 11th and made double bogey, handing the lead back to Rodriguez.

Trevino regained a tie for the top with a 20-foot putt on the 13th and had the top spot alone again when Rodriguez misclubbed and got a 6-iron in the water on the 15th.

A brilliant 5-iron shot to four feet on the 16th set up the birdie that gave Trevino a two-shot lead and apparently wrapped up the title.

But he ran a long putt about 12 feet beyond the cup on the 17th and had that left for par when Hill rammed in a 20-foot birdie.

That cut the lead to one shot going to the final hole.

Both Trevino and Hill had putts from about 40 feet, up and over a ridge. Again, Trevino was long, by about eight feet. Hill got his to three feet and Trevino had to make his come-backer for the win.

He rolled it in the heart of the cup.

despite missing 16 games with injuries.

Bondra's first goal gave Washington a 1-0 lead, and John Druce made it 2-1 at 13:42 of the second period. Bondra iced the victory against goaltender Tom Barrasso by converting a pass from Al Iafrate with 2:08 left.

Canadiens 2, Whalers 0

MONTREAL (AP) – Rookie Gilbert Dionne scored both goals, and Patrick Roy made 32 saves for his first career playoff shutout.

The opening goal came on the power play after Mike Keane poked free the puck from a scramble in the corner. Dionne, Montreal's top scorer in the second half of the season with 21 goals, picked up the puck behind the net and swept around to tuck it under goaltender Frank Pietrangelo at 16:18 of the opening period.

Sabres 3, Bruins 2

BOSTON (AP) – Buffalo's league-leading power play produced two goals and the Sabres survived a furious third-period comeback by Boston.

Petr Svoboda got a shorthanded goal in the first period, and Pat LaFontaine and Doug Bodger scored in the second, giving Buffalo a 3-0 lead.

Then the Bruins, who had two apparent goals waved off in the second period, took the first 11 shots of the third. Adam Oates and Vladimir Ruzicka scored on two of them. But Buffalo, behind rookie goalie Tom Draper, hung on to take a 1-0 lead in the best-of-7 Adams Division series.

Education board president needs sense of direction

As Karl Shurtliff begins his term as president of Idaho's State Board of Education, we'd like to offer a few words of advice:

What the board needs now, more than ever, is a leader who can craft compromises and build coalitions – someone who can hold his tongue even under attack.

Board Member Roberta Fields hinted as much when she nominated Keith Hinckley for the post, in part, because he is "calm."

Frankly, Mr. Shurtliff, we're uneasy about the vow you made after your election. You said: "I am not going to stop writing letters, stop raising issues I believe concern the people of Idaho and stop questioning things I believe need to be questioned."

We applaud your intention to make sure Idaho's public schools, colleges, universities and other agencies under the board's watch are well managed. But your fire-brand style can slow the board's progress – as well as burn its public image.

When the State Board fired Boise State University President John Keiser last fall, students, faculty and community members cried out for reassurance that the board had no intention of stunting a growing university.

Such reassurance may have averted some of the bitter words – but the board stayed mum. Then, even after a weekend of discontent, you stepped forward in an angry and defensive press conference.

And few can forget what happened a few months later, when you described the board's resolution clearing Keiser of any wrongdoing in his job performance (in exchange for an assurance that he wouldn't sue) as "mush."

Keiser's attorneys criticized your "arrogance," "crudeness" and "lack of sensitivity to others."

But that was last year. This is a new and critical year for the State Board.

First, you will have to choose a new BSU president and to do that, you will have to work with some of the same people you angered during the Keiser controversy.

Second, the board is likely to see increased scrutiny from legislators and members of the public who believe the state may be better off if the structure of the State Board of Education were radically changed.

What's under fire: Idaho senator: public school reform – which has become a hot, political issue – the board must provide steady, non-partisan leadership. It's more important than ever to have a board president who can rise above the fray.

High rollers stand to gain from land deal, not Idaho

Wouldn't you know that a recent transplant from California would be in favor of a proposal to turn the federal lands in Idaho to the highest bidder?

David Doremus is a California real estate developer who, in the process of establishing Idaho residency – and already running for the Idaho 1st District Republican nomination for Congress. He supports turning federal lands over to states and to private owners. He acknowledges that the idea is politically impractical but makes it plain he would do it if he could.

The problem with his idea from an Idaho perspective (something Doremus would be well advised to acquire) is that it tends to transfer federal lands in Idaho from their present ownership - all of us - to the highest bidder. Do you really think those bidders will all be from Idaho? Or even most of them?

That land will pass into the hands of high rollers from Texas and New York and Illinois.

And California, of course.

If Idaho is to be owned by distant people of the United States, including the people of Idaho. Better than the owner be the feds, on whom we have congressional handles, than some billionaire somewhere who answers to nobody.

The tradeoff on that arrangement is that Idahoans are co-owners of all the other federal forests and parks and seashores.

Besides, some parts of America are so exceptional that everyone should share them.

It is Idaho's blessing, not its burden, that this state has so much of that kind of land.

There's no good reason to test Lincoln's remains

The experiment to unlock Abraham Lincoln's genes has been delayed, making historians wait to learn if that lanky, tragic visage was caused by the inner wounds of war or merely an inherited disorder.

Lincoln may have had Marfan's syndrome, a genetic condition that produces abnormal height and elongated extremities, both characteristic of the 16th president. Scientists and historians who pore over pictures of Lincoln have connected his physical appearance – considered odd by contemporaries – to Marfan's.

The hitch in the experiment is caused by uncertainty over linking DNA test results to the disorder, causing a committee of the National Museum of Health and Medicine to postpone this microscopic scrutiny of Lincoln.

If a man as great as Lincoln had Marfan's syndrome, that may ease the burden on some 40,000 Americans who carry the disorder, but DNA testing cannot unlock the deeper mysteries of the man. Snipping at his hair locks and inquiring into his tissue has the disquieting effect of stirring old bones. Do we need to peer into every cavity covered by time?

The disinterment of President Zachary Taylor produced no new evidence that he was assassinated. Old Zack now has been returned to his peace. For Lincoln, peace from old wounds is even more deserved.

Henry's Fork becomes election issue

Quane Kenyon
Idaho politics

Voters will hear a lot about the Henry's Fork Plan in this year's election campaign.

A river protection plan approved by the Senate but defeated by the House in a last-minute lobbying effort left some hard feelings among lawmakers. Some, like Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly, felt so strongly that they tried to defeat a follow-up bill granting interim protection to part of the area involved.

Interim protection provides a degree of cover for the lawmakers – mainly Republicans – who helped defeat the bill.

Noh and others felt that those who voted against the Henry's Fork plan should have to stand on that decision, and explain it to voters.

But as one of the last acts of the 1992 session, a measure was passed granting interim protection to about 80 miles of streams in the Henry's Fork Basin of the Snake River, in the northeastern corner of the state.

As he reluctantly signed the bill into law this week, Gov. Cecil Andrus suggested that the Water Resource Board, which prepared the plan, make only minor revisions to it and send it back to the Legislature.

Andrus urged members of the Water Resource Board to make it a campaign issue by asking legislative candidates to declare where they stand on the plan when hearings are held on the revisions.

In any event, the governor said there was "much misinformation and outright falsehoods" in the last-minute effort that scuttled the protection bill.

It's being discussed in one major campaign, will certainly come up in the 2nd District congressional race and will be a factor in legislative contests.

As he reluctantly signed the bill into law this week, Gov. Cecil Andrus suggested that the Water Resource Board, which prepared the plan, make only minor revisions to it and send it back to the Legislature.

One of the three Republicans running for the GOP U.S. Senate nomination, Milt Erhart, favors the river-protection plan. His opponents have opposed it.

Senate President Pro Tem Michael Crapo of Idaho Falls, running for the 2nd District GOP nomination, voted against the original protection plan. If he wins the primary, and state Auditor J.D. Williams wins the Democratic nomination, the Henry's Fork could be the biggest issue of the campaign.

Williams, who served on the Water Resource Board until he resigned last week, helped prepare the plan and battled to get it through the Legislature.

Some plan supporters also filed for legislative seats, mainly in eastern Idaho, which will serve as a forum for the river plan debate.

Actually, a secondary issue, not river protection versus hydroelectric projects, was what caused the Henry's Fork plan to fail.

Rep. Bruce Newcomb, R-Burley, and others argued that the plan gave too much priority to "in stream" use of water over "consumptive" use of water. That claim is big one in a state where the southern Idaho farm economy depends on irrigation water, most of it from the Snake River.

Farm interests felt their traditional first claim to the water might be set aside in favor of "in stream" use for such things as fishing and recreation.

It was enough to swing key votes; the measure failed by three votes.

Resolving that dispute probably will get priority when the Water Resource panel works on a revised version of the rejected plan.

Cruisers cause problems

It is springtime and we already have complaints about the cruisers. They cause problems by going to the bathroom on people's lawns, cause traffic jams on Blue Lakes, keep people awake, and cause problems in the businesses' parking lots.

Well, folks, I have the solution to the problem. We outlaw the cruise.

But let's not stop there. Since the adults go to the bars where they stab, kill, rape and fight, we will outlaw all bars. See, folks, we sure can solve these problems.

Oh, let's not stop there.

You see people's pets go the bathroom on people's yards, so let's outlaw all pets in Twin Falls. Now we are really making progress.

But you see, we are still not done. Since the adults that play baseball might keep people awake with their fun and noise, so we outlaw their baseball games.

Now to continue with our problem solving.

We don't want all the traffic, so let's outlaw all cars on and around Blue Lakes, not just the cruisers but everyone. Now we won't have any more wrecks on that poor street will we?

Now for the business parking lots, since they don't want the cruisers there, we outlaw the same people from going there to spend their money.

Now we are really solving the problems.

When the cruisers take their money to some other town and the businesses along Blue Lakes feel the pinch and go out of business, then we can use their stores for a youth center. And since the cruise is outlawed, the kids can turn their energy to joining the gangs.

Come on, people, let's stand behind our kids. When we were young, we cruised. OK, in my time I dragged Main Street with one of your city fathers that you have now.

I have lived in and around Twin Falls for over 50 years. Twin Falls has never wanted to support their youths.

They would rather sit back and complain and do nothing.

Why not work with the kids and give them their places to have fun and enjoy life? For if you don't, you haven't even seen the tip of your problems.

If you think I am wrong, go to L.A., San Francisco or even Salt Lake.

Fence, cows quell land quandary

I read the story about what a land owner was doing to Billingsley Creek in the April 13 Times-News with great interest. I have the solution for the land owner.

If they wanted to clear the stream of vegetation and stay out of trouble with the state, just fence off the stream and put in a bunch of cows.

The results will be the same, it will just take a little longer and he will not get in trouble with the Idaho Department of Water Resources.

When the Idaho state legislators passed laws to protect Idaho's water quality, they were sure to exempt the damage caused by four-legged bulldozers.

Otherwise the bill would not have ever made it into law, and if you do not believe me, just ask someone from the Department of Water Resources, like Terry Blau.

It is happening all over the state on thousands of miles of stream, not just Billingsley Creek.

It seems all too common for the state to pass laws with special exemptions and this is one of many.

Paper says Libyan in hiding will testify

LONDON (AP) – A former Libyan government official, now under U.S. government protection, is ready to testify against two Libyans accused in the bombing of Pan Am Flight 103, a British newspaper reported Sunday.

The Independent quoted Vincent Cannistraro, former chief of CIA counterterrorist operations, as saying the unidentified Libyan "knew "the who, where and when" of the 1988 bombing over Lockerbie, Scotland, in which 270 people died.

Cannistraro was also quoted as saying that a Maltese shopkeeper who sold clothes to the bomber was ready to supply evidence and would implicate the two Libyans.

The former CIA official, who now runs his own security consulting firm, told the paper he believed the pair coordinated their efforts with Palestinian terrorists in Syria in an operation possibly financed by Iran.

The United Nations imposed sanctions against Libya Wednesday, aimed at persuading it to surrender Abdel Basset Ali al-Megrahi, 39, and Lamen Khalifa Fhimah, 35, for trial in Britain or the United States. The sanctions require all countries to cut air links and arms sales to Libya.

The newspaper report could not be immediately confirmed. The Foreign Office said it had no information on the report and referred queries to the U.S. government.

In February, Cannistraro told The Washington Post that a Libyan source had reported that the two suspects had "disappeared and will not be found." The two men, described in the West as Libyan intelligence operatives, subsequently appeared in public in Tripoli, the Libyan capital.

Pope calls for peaceful 'new humanity'

Los Angeles Times

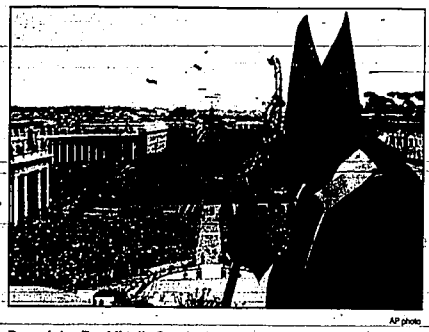

VATICAN CITY – A gigantic crowd of festive worshipers thronged St. Peter's Square Sunday for the traditional Easter blessing from Pope John Paul II, who urged them to forsake greed and materialism and work peacefully together to build a new world, "a new creation for a new humanity."

The Vatican's largest Easter parade in years, more than 100,000 by some estimates, spilled in brilliant sunshine from the square into the broad avenue leading from the near-by Tiber River.

Flanked by prelates of his church, the 71-year-old pope celebrated a leisurely, opulent Mass on the steps of a basilica dressed with 100,000 flowers donated by growers in the Netherlands. Easter is the holiest and most joyous day in the church year. The belief that Jesus rose from the dead three days after his crucifixion is the essential mystery of all Christianity.

"I wish you peace, real peace, the peace yearned for by the heart of every human being," John Paul said after Mass from the central balcony of the basilica in his "Urbi et Orbi" message – "To the City and the World."

"May this Easter wish reach those still fighting in certain regions of Africa, in the middle of Europe and in the Caucasus," the pontiff said. How could he fail to remember the ethnic, Finnish, Tamil to Swahili tragedy through which the peoples of Bosnia-Herzegovina and Nagorno-Karabakh are living?"

AP photo

Pope John Paul II tells Sunday's crowd at St. Peter's Square to forsake greed and materialism and work peacefully together.

Arrayed like a tapestry in the piazza before John Paul stood plumed Italian military honor guards, sundry knights of the church with cocked hats and swords, the diplomatic corps in black, and pikemen of the Swiss Guard in serried ranks whose striped blue and orange uniforms haven't changed since the Renaissance.

John Paul read greetings in 56 languages from around the world in a message transmitted to more than 50 countries around the world. In English, he said: "A blessed Easter in the joy of Jesus Christ, the risen lord and savior of the world!"

The Polish-born pope spoke most pointedly to Europe, where, he fears, common Christian roots and values risk being overwhelmed by a greedy and divisive quest for material wealth.

"Listen especially you, the nations of Europe, who are in the process of affirming, in the changing of political systems, your own particular characteristics. Listen, I beg you, to the voice of the one who has worked in you with great power. He urges you not to be afraid: He exhorts you to make the old continent into a new reality, in which difference does not mean opposition and clashes but mutual enrichment in complementarity and exchange," John Paul said.

The pope urged Europeans "never to base security on the force of arms, which destroy life and all fraternal civil coexistence." The risen Christ, John Paul said, "exhorts you never to stifle with selfishness and with greed for ever greater material goods, the noble plans of development and peace: but rather to seek the freedom, truth and love which indeed set free, and make it possible to build together a new world. He exhorts you to be a new creation for a new humanity."

200 radicals attack U.S. cultural center in Seoul

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) – About 200 radical students hurled firebombs and rocks at the U.S. Information Service building on Sunday to protest alleged U.S. involvement in the assassination of a Korean patriot in 1949.

Several windows were broken in the attack, but no injuries were reported.

Anti-U.S. protests flared after the assassin of Kim Ku, one of Korea's most revered patriots, said recently that he had acted at the instigation of Korean and U.S. intelligence officials. Ahn Doo-hee, the assassin, later denied the United States was involved.

Ahn, an army officer closely linked with an ultra-rightist group, confessed to the killing. He was imprisoned, but later paroled. Kim fought for Korea's independence as head of a government-in-exile in China during Japan's colonial rule of the Korean peninsula from 1910 to 1945.

Also Sunday, about 1,500 dissidents and students marched to protest alleged vote rigging, the national Yonhap news agency said. Riot police wearing shields and tear gas masks surrounded the election protesters during their mile-long march, but there were no clashes.

The march also commemorated the 32nd anniversary of a civil uprising sparked by massive vote rigging. The marchers Sunday also accused the military of rigging the March 24 election.

Taiwanese rallies press for democratic reforms

Los Angeles Times

TAIPEI, Taiwan – The opposition Democratic Progressive Party launched a three-day series of demonstrations Sunday to press for a constitutional amendment that would provide for direct presidential elections.

About 5,000 protesters marched through the streets of Taipei in a light rain for three hours Sunday after-noon, chanting slogans calling for constitutional reform and the release of political prisoners. Most marchers then gathered in a sports stadium for an evening rally. Police had issued permits and there were no reports of violence.

"What they're demanding is real democracy, not phony democracy," declared Lin Sheng-ting, 47, a marching-route bystander who said he supports the opposition. "They're always making sacrifices. They don't fear being arrested. They're always struggling. They have a great democratic spirit."

Demonstrations were also staged Sunday in about 20 other cities across Taiwan, according to Hsu Hsin-liang, chairman of the Democratic Progressives. The opposition plans to bus protesters from around the island to Taipei for a mass rally and demonstration here Monday, then continue with a third day of protests Tuesday, Hsu said.

"The goal of our demonstration is to let people show their support for direct presidential elections," Hsu stressed. "It is quite clear that the people's wish, their expectation, has been let down by the Nationalist Party."

Dispute ends in double murder

JERUSALEM (AP) – A man killed his brother and a pregnant sister-in-law and blew off his infant nephew's hand on Sunday because he had been cut out of his father's will, police said.

Another brother already has been convicted of a stabbing linked to the dispute over the inheritance – a quarter-acre of land.

Yaacov Shibam, 30, used an army-issued M-16 automatic rifle to kill his brother Shimshon, 38, and his sister-in-law, Carmit, 22, who was nine months pregnant. Police were unable to save the baby.

Carmit Shibam was married to another brother, Yossi, who faces sentencing this week for stabbing yet another family member.

Police said the woman died trying to protect her year-old son, whose hand was blown off in the volley of fire, Israel Radio reported the child was hospitalized in stable condition.

The shootings took place at Elyakhin, an agricultural settlement northeast of Tel Aviv. Neighbors called police after they heard rounds of automatic fire early Sunday.

Yaacov Shibam surrendered after police closed off the settlement. He had been issued the M-16 by the army because he was serving his annual reserve duty, police said.

Eleven brothers and sisters were involved in the dispute over a quarter-acre of land owned by their father, who is still alive. Israel Radio said the father had changed the will twice in efforts to placate his feuding children.

Laureate says he declined Israeli offer

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) – An Arab Nobel laureate said Sunday he had declined to accept an award from an Israeli university, but a spokesman for the Hebrew University in Jerusalem denied reports that it was the institution involved.

Egyptian Naguib Mahfouz, winner of the 1988 Nobel Prize in literature, told The Associated Press that the offer of an honorary doctorate was made last year by a university in Jerusalem. He did not say which, but the daily al-Akhbar newspaper said it was the Hebrew University.

There are no other universities in Jerusalem, but there are several colleges.

"The university values Mahfouz's literary talents but he was never offered an honorary doctorate or any other honor by the Hebrew University," university spokesman Jerry Barach told The Associated Press.

Non-communist takes power in Afghanistan

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) – Muslim rebels seized more territory on Sunday and tried to put aside rivalries to avoid a bloody scramble for power. But one rebel leader renewed his threats to attack the besieged capital.

A non-communist official took charge of ousted President Najibullah's crumbling regime, but the government's power was virtually gone.

Leaders from 10 rebel groups met in Peshawar, Pakistan, and agreed to form an interim council to negotiate with the remnants of the Kabul government. A Pakistan Foreign Ministry spokesman, Javeed Hussein, said there was a "broad consensus" on an orderly transfer of power to end the 14-year-old civil war.

However, the most fundamentalist rebel faction, Hezbi-Islami led by Gulbuddin Hekmatyar, rejected the interim council plan.

"We don't see any prospect for a (peaceful) solution," said Hekmatyar's spokesman in Pakistan, Nawab Salim. "It is not a joke. Either the government in Kabul surrenders or we will attack."

Hekmatyar's faction was once one of the biggest recipients of U.S. military aid despite his strong anti-American stance. He opposed any backing from Iran.

The fundamentalists are also warning of a showdown with more moderate guerrilla chief Ahmad Shah Massood, whose fighters have encircled Kabul and forced Najibullah to flee into hiding on Thursday.

No violence was reported Sunday in or around Kabul, which was shrouded by mist and heavy rain.

Massood has announced plans to form an Islamic government comprising all rebels – including Hekmatyar's group – as well as militia commanders and a high-ranking general from Najibullah's old government. Massood held talks with Foreign Minister Abdul Wakil outside Kabul on Friday and Saturday.

Massood, whose faction was backed by Washington and Saudi Arabia, is known for his fierce resistance during the nine-year Soviet occupation that ended in 1989. His Jamiat-e-Islami group is the largest single force organized among the mujahedeen, or Islamic holy warriors.

"The situation has changed," Massood said told journalists at his base about 40 miles north of Kabul. "I think there is no need to create a neutral government. It is better that a mujahedeen government comes to power."

Major Afghan rebel groups

PESHAWAR, Pakistan (AP) – Here is a brief look at the major Afghan resistance groups, headquartered in Pakistan and Iran.

HEZB-E-ISLAMI, or Party of Islam: Led by radical fundamentalist Gulbuddin Hekmatyar. Believed to be one of best armed and organized groups. Strongest support among Pashtuns (or Pathans), Afghanistan's majority ethnic group. Received bulk of U.S. military aid after Soviet troops invaded Afghanistan in 1979, largely because its fighters were considered most capable of winning the war.

JAMIAT-B-ISLAMI, Party of Islam: Led by Burhanuddin Rabbani, former professor of Islamic theology at Kabul University. A devout Muslim, Rabbani says he wants a moderate Islamic government. Most of group's leadership is Tajik. Strongholds are in northern and western Afghanistan.

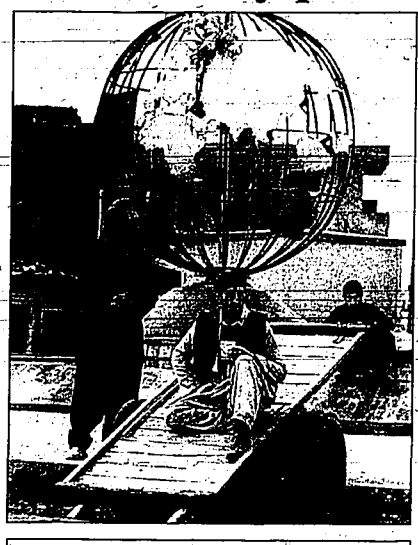

ITTEHAD-E-ISLAMI, or Islamic Unity Party: Led by Abdul Rasool Sayyaf, closely aligned with the militant Muslim Brotherhood and heavily financed by radical underground groups in Middle East. Not considered a strong force, militarily or politically. Influence comes mainly from wealthy Arab backers. Sayyaf, who is militant in his demands for an Islamic revolution in Afghanistan, also contends a U.S.-led conspiracy is trying to sabotage the installation of an Islamic government in Kabul.

HEZB-E-ISLAMI Khalis: or Party of Islam: Breakaway faction of Hekmatyar's group led by Yunis Khalis, Muslim cleric known as "the fighting mullah." Khalis' rebel forces limited to eastern Afghanistan's Nangarhar and Paktia provinces, dominated by Pashtuns. He is fundamentalist who opposes elections, saying they violate tenets of Islam, and advocates theocratic state.

HARAKAT-E-INQUILAB-E-ISLAMI, or Islamic Revolutionary Party: led by Muslim cleric Mohammad Nabi Mohammadi. At one time among strongest resistance groups, with support throughout much of the countryside, but widespread corruption gradually reduced it to one of smallest rebel forces. Believed to be a moderate. Mohammadi belongs to Afghanistan's majority Sunni sect of Islam.

NATIONAL ISLAMIC FRONT OF AFGHANISTAN: Led by Syed Ahmad Gailani, a spiritual leader of powerful Qadiriya religious order. Gailani, Afghanistan's royal family's most fiercely advocates the return of King Zahir Shah from Rome, where he has lived in exile since a coup in 1973. Considered most moderate of guerrilla leaders. Gailani's support is mainly in Pashtun-dominated south and west of Afghanistan. Has been financially supported by the United States and European countries.

Democracy proves tough for Kurds

AP photos

Three unemployed Kurds, top photo, wait for job offers last week in Irbil, northern Iraq. A father holds a handful of notes to pay for gas, below. An embargo imposed by Baghdad on Kurds has caused gasoline prices to skyrocket in the region.

SALAHUDIN, Iraq (AP) – As Iraqi Kurds prepare for their first democratic elections next month, their leaders are squabbling over whether to hold autonomy talks with the government and the militias distrust each other.

Mahmoud Osman of the Kurdistan Socialist Party proudly outlined plans for the vote, then acknowledged: "I have never seen elections."

Lack of voting experience is only the first worry for the 3.5 million Kurds in northern Iraq that Kurdish guerrillas were able to keep in their grasp, with U.S. and European help, after a failed rebellion last year.

They are divided by clan loyalties. Many hesitate to give up the dream of independent Kurdistan and accept more attainable autonomy within Iraq. Others naively assume elections will suddenly solve the Kurds' many problems.

In theory, after the May 17 election, Iraqi Kurds will have a unified government and a single army fashioned from rival militias. That would put them in a stronger position to negotiate autonomy with President Saddam Hussein.

But the internal conflicts are real, and the Kurds' experience of governments and armies comes mainly from rebelling against them.

No wonder that Massoud Barzani, leader of the dominant Kurdistan Democratic Party, pleaded at a campaign rally for an "orderly election." As he spoke, a gun went off by accident in the heavily armed crowd, wounding a bystander.

Barzani inherited leadership from his father, Mustafa Barzani, who was the main Kurdish chief from the 1930s until his death in exile in 1979.

Massoud Barzani, a 45-year-old student of geopolitics, is hardly the traditional Kurdish guerrilla leader holed up in an isolated mountain stronghold. His mountain headquarters is a former luxury hotel in Salahudin, a resort named for the Kurdish Muslim warrior known to the West as Saladin.

Barzani realizes the United States and Europe do not want an independent Iraqi Kurdistan that could threaten revolts in Kurdish areas of neighboring Turkey, Iran and Syria.

For that reason, he is prepared to negotiate autonomy within Iraq once Saddam lifts the economic blockade he imposed last October to force the Kurds into line.

Hoshyar Zebari, Barzani's chief spokesman, said the election is crucial to convincing the West that Kurds can run a democracy and manage the foreign aid needed to rebuild their devastated economy.

In Barzani's view, Iraqi Kurds need Turkey as an ally if they are to achieve real freedom from Baghdad. He says he will not tolerate cross-border attacks from his region by separatist Turkish Kurds of the Marxist Kurdish Labor Party.

Jalal Talabani of the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan, Barzani's main rival, has a much different vision.

At his mountain compound outside Sulaymaniyah, he said he would not negotiate with Iraq while Saddam remained in power. Doing so, he said, would make the Kurds "a tool of the dictatorship."

Talabani, 57, sees Kurdistan as a base for opposition to Saddam.

He said ousting the Iraqi leader would be "not very difficult" if the opposition could unite. Revolts by both the Kurds and Iraqi Shiite Muslims, however, failed to dislodge Saddam after the Gulf War.

Barzani and Talabani disagree on the future powers of the elected leader and whether the army should be a regular force or a guerrilla band striking from the mountains.

They agree that the more than 100,000 guerrillas in the various militias of the umbrella Kurdistan Front must be reduced in number. But fighters in the Barzani and Talabani militias scorn their rivals and seem unready to give up the guns that mean prestige and power in the Kurdish mountains.

Also, the small guerrilla wage is the only means of survival for many peshmergas, or guerrilla fighters.

Albanian body passes economic reforms

TIRANA, Albania (AP) – Parliament has approved economic reforms that will privatize much of Albania's property and cut food subsidies in Europe's poorest nation, state radio said Sunday.

Lawmakers approved the package late Saturday in a show-of-hands vote, with the opposition Socialist party abstaining.

The Democratic Party, which won 92 of parliament's 140 seats in March, pushed the measures as a way to reduce rising crime and rebuild an economy ruined by almost 50 years of communist mismanagement.

Dependency can damage marriages

"I contemplated suicide, I contemplated divorce," says a man who, in a serious depression, could not see a way through the marital problems he was experiencing. Now relieved of the depression, he is aware of myriad options to solving the problems he once felt were insurmountable.

JoAnn Larsen
Psychology

No one knows how many people do abandon a marriage in the depths of depression – there seem to be no statistics – but there are many. Perhaps, in fact, most people get a divorce in the throes of some depression.

Depression – the chemical or clinical disorder – as contrasted with depression – the blues – is a dark cloud that sometimes comes in on a victim like a weather front. "It can steal up as insidiously as a November fog, chilling the heart, sapping the will even to get out of bed in the morning," says one author.

"It is known as clinical depression" and it is not to be confused with the everyday 'blahs' that most people encounter at one time or another, like passing rain squalls in their lives. Clinical depression is something else, a full-scale tumble into the void. It can last for months and recur over years with - at its worst - devastating effects."

In that dark void, there can be no working on a relationship. "There is no relationship," says the man quoted above. A depression saps not only a person's will, but his or her ability to look out, to tend to a relationship, to see the needs of someone else. The person in the depression is, unknowingly, in a survival mode, in the water without a lifejacket, fighting for breath, not able to see anyone on the shore.

To understand why depression – the clinical disorder – has such an impact on individuals and marriages, it is vital to understand clearly what depression is and is not. True depression is not a mind-over-body condition which can be cured merely by applying enough willpower and hard work. Rather, depression is foremost a physical disorder akin to ulcers or high blood pressure, the result of an innerplay of biological and psychological forces.

Because of the biological or physical base of clinical depression, "snapping out" of such depression would be about as easy as snapping out of a broken leg, emphasizes Salt Lake psychiatrist Susan Mirow, who says: "People don't realize there is a difference between the mind and brain. The mind is what we think of as ourselves, the brain is an organ. When a person suffers from a chemical depression, the brain's chemicals are

Dealing with Diabetes

Donna Drage took control of her life and disease, but it took time

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

HEYBURN – For 18 years, Donna Drage refused to make peace with the disease inside her. As a young child, she hid from her parents when they tried to give her shots. As a teen-ager, she stubbornly ignored her diet and snacked on junk food with her friends. Often, she went into dangerous insulin shock.

Drage, 24, was diagnosed with diabetes when she was 7. She has plenty of company. According to the American Diabetes Association, 14 million people in the United States have diabetes, though more than half of them (including an estimated 25,000 in Idaho) do not know it — and may not know it until their bodies are wracked by life-threatening complications.

'It took another individual to change my life around. I just wouldn't do it for myself.'

— Donna Drage

Diabetes affects the body's ability to produce or process insulin, a hormone that changes food into sugar for use as energy. Often called the "silent killer," diabetes can lead to amputation, blindness, kidney failure, heart disease and stroke. Infants born to diabetic women are at high risk for birth defects.

Diabetes is a chronic disease. It has no cure. But it can be treated.

Early detection and patient education are the keys, according to Ina Mae Seaich, R.N., clinical specialist in diabetes and wife of the only board certified endocrinologist in private practice in Idaho. Seaich believes in the importance of diabetes management so strongly that she recently wrote a proposal for diabetes funding. The result is a grant of $90,000 over a three-year period, the first federal grant for diabetes education in the state.

The Rural Health Outreach Grant Project is designed to decrease the complications of diabetes by providing physicians with updated information, training for office personnel, tools to increase office efficiency and a network of consulting physicians and non-physician providers.

Now in the initial stages, the program, which is being administered by the South Central District Health Department, is expected to eventually run itself and to generate additional funding.

"So often a patient's questions will overlap into several different fields," said Seaich, whose 16-year-old daughter has diabetes. "For example, someone might want to know how to adjust insulin when attending a holiday feast." She continued, "This is about a doctor learning more about meal planning and a dietitian learning more about complications."

The idea behind the emphasis on diabetes education is that what you don't know can hurt (or even kill) you. And, according to the National Diabetes Advisory Board, most patients cannot or do not utilize available resources in a cost-effective manner on their own.

Drage finally took control of her life five years ago, when she became pregnant with her son, Coti. Doctors had cautioned her against having babies, and Coti had to spend the first nine days of his life in intensive care. "It took another individual to make me change my life around," Drage said. "I just wouldn't do it for myself."

Today, Drage takes care of herself. She gives herself three shots a day, checks her blood sugar every 12 hours, exercises regularly and avoids overeating. She also has frequent eye exams and goes to the dentist every two months.

"Cavities don't heal right, so I usually end up have root canals or getting teeth pulled," Drage said. Cuts on her skin heal slowly, too, and she is troubled by diabetic ulcers on her legs and by occasional mood swings. The cost of her medical care runs between $400 and $500 a month. Insurance coverage would cost her more, and she has been unable to obtain help from Social Security.

Still, Drage feels lucky in many ways. "Now I know that people should get help for their diabetes," she said. "If you do, you can live a pretty normal life." Drage also expressed gratitude for her supportive family.

"Coti has accepted my disease," said Drage, looking out the kitchen window of her white frame farmhouse at the child on the jungle gym. "And my mom can always tell when I don't feel good, so she keeps close watch on what I eat and drink." Husband Kurt is even more diligent.

"Kurt is great at nagging, and he goes around saying, 'Let's check your blood sugar,' or 'Do you feel OK?'" said Drage, with a laugh. "He's perfect for me, because I really do need a baby sitter."

Kurt Drage, who works on his parents' dairy farm, admitted he is vocal about his concern. "I watch her pretty closely," he said, "and I sleep a lot lighter than I did before I got married."

Drage said she is glad she learned to manage her diabetes. She added, "I figure a few minutes a day is not much to keep me healthy." Her son seconds the motion.

"When Coti first saw me giving myself shots, he said, 'Why do you have to do that, Mommy?'" Drage said. "I told him I had to do it to stay alive, and he said, 'Well, then you do it.'"

ANDY ARENZ/The Times-News

Donna Drage's battle with diabetes has included shots of insulin since she was young. Even at age 24, she must endure this facet of the disease.

A few facts and figures

The Times-News

Diabetes strikes in two forms. Type I (insulin dependent) is an autoimmune disease, occurring most often in children and young adults, in which the body does not produce any insulin. Type II (non-insulin dependent) is a metabolic disorder resulting from the inability to produce enough or to properly use insulin.

Anyone who is over 30, overweight or has a family history of diabetes is at risk. Hispanics are 55 percent more likely to have diabetes.

According to the American Diabetes Association, the warning signs are as follows. Type I: frequent urination, unusual thirst, extreme hunger, unusual weight loss, extreme fatigue, irritability.

Type II: any Type I symptom, frequent infections, blurred vision, cuts/bruises slow to heal, tingling/numbness in hands or feet and recurring skin, gum or bladder infections.

Looking good

Spring is 'season of the shirt'

This spring is the season of the shirt. No fashionable wardrobe should be without one — or two, or three.

Cotton is the key. Crisp, white pique. Soft, blue chambray. Or polished cotton patterned with stripes, checks or florals.

It's not only what shirt you wear that makes this old standby seem fresh and new. It's how you wear it, and what you wear it with.

The fashion directors at Casual Corner recently brainstormed some ideas for shirt looks that are quick, easy and inexpensive. Here's what they came up with:

• Suit up. As an alternative to a silky blouse, a cotton shirt gives a brisk, tailored attitude to a suit. Wear it buttoned up with a tie. Or unbuttoned, over a pretty camisole or tough-guy T-shirt.

• Tie one on. The trendy way to wear a shirt is knotted at the waist or under the bust.

• Dress it up. Buy a chambray shirt extra-large, add a pair of tights and a wide belt for the easiest shirtdress of the season.

• Strike a pose. Wrap a crisp white shirt around the waist and tie it in back. It's a look right off the European runways.

• Take cover. On vacation, a loose knit shirt doubles as a coverup over a bathing suit, or a jacket over T-shirt, shorts or pants.

• Stick with the classics. For work, team a chambray shirt with a white T-shirt, navy blazer and slim, navy skirt. For play, swap the skirt for blue jeans.

Platform shoes come back

CHICAGO – The footwear industry appears to be suffering from the Hollywood sequel syndrome.

Case in point: platform shoes.

First, it was a '40s look popularized by Brazilian bombshell Carmen Miranda. Then, the comeback in the mid-'70s, and now in the '90s — a decade touted for its back-to-basics approach to fashion — the too-tall shoe is showing up again.

Many platforms this spring are downright feminine, resting on soles only ¼-inch thick. But then again, there are the throwbacks to those '70s-ish shoes-on-stilts. Highest on the high list are the 2-inch platforms by Pancaldi and Charles Jourdan.

Platforms remain a potential orthopedic nightmare, say podiatrists.

Although they're more comfortable than stiletto heels, platforms put pressure on the ball of the foot and lower back, according to Dr. Bart Gastwirth, chairman of the orthopedics department at the Chicago-based William M. Scholl College of Podiatric Medicine.

Platforms also can impede stability and balance. "One of the problems with platforms in the '70s were the crepe soles," said Gastwirth. "The shoe would stop suddenly but the foot would keep on moving."

But attitudes may change now that Grateful Dead

Health notes

MIND OVER MATTER: In case you doubted that your mental health can effect your physical health, a researcher reports that skin cancer patients in a short-term psychological program showed better coping and mood five years later, as well as an unexplained reduction in cancer recurrence. The report was presented at the American Cancer Society's annual science writers seminar.

BATTERED CHILDREN: Nearly 2.7 million cases of child abuse were reported last year, an increase of 6 percent over 1990. And an estimated 1,385 children died of abuse in 1991, a 10 percent increase, the National Committee for Prevention of Child Abuse says. Experts say a more violent society, harsh economic times and drug abuse are partly to blame.

BREAST CANCER RISK: There's some weighty new findings about breast cancer: Patients who were at least 25 percent heavier than their ideal weight at the time of diagnosis ran a higher risk of getting the disease again than did thinner women, according to a report presented at the American Cancer Society's science writers seminar.

TEE OFF ON CHOLESTEROL: Although most people do not think of golf as a strenuous activity, a study conducted at the New Hampshire Heart Institute found it to be quite beneficial. Golfers who pulled their own carts or carried their bag were able to lower their unhealthy cholesterol level (LDL's) which their healthy cholesterol (HDL's) remained the same. It's not swinging the golf club that causes this, but rather the walking involved. The typical golfer will walk about five miles each time they play a round of 18 holes.

HEART-MEDICINE STUDY: A common heart and hypertension medicine that has been blamed for causing depression in past research showed no evidence of that tendency in a study of more than 4,000 patients. But the study in the Journal of the American Medical Association looked only at ongoing use of the drugs known as beta blockers — such as Inderal, Lopressor and Corgard — and did not explore depression in patients just starting the potentially life-saving medicines.

EASY TO STOMACH: Good news, globe trotters: An antibiotic drug currently available only as injections shows promise as a safer treatment for travelers' diarrhea when taken orally, researchers report in the Journal of the American Medical Association. The drug is aztreonam, made by Bristol Myers Squib.

BLADDER CANCER: Another ingenious scientific discovery: Bladder cancers may be more aggressive if they lose a gene that acts as a brake, suggesting that a genetic test may be able to distinguish patients who need more powerful therapy, a researcher told the American Cancer Society's science writers seminar. The tipoff is the absence of the RB gene, an anticoncogene.

CLEARING THE WAY: If you have blocked fallopian tubes, women, a simple, new procedure may enable you to become pregnant without costly surgery or in vitro fertilization. The new technique is known as salpingography and fallopian tube recanalization.

AIDS OUTLOOK: The AIDS epidemic is out of control worldwide, governments aren't doing enough to stop it, and no vaccine to prevent its spread is likely for at-least-five-years. That pessimistic assessment comes from Jonathan Mann, director of the International AIDS Center at the Harvard AIDS Institute.

Peeping Tom looks at more than repairs

Dear Abby
Abigail VanBuren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 30-year-old, happily married woman. Last week my husband was out of town on business. Before he left, without my knowledge, he arranged for a contractor to do some repair work on our chimney.

Anyway, I decided to spend the morning housecleaning. Sometimes, in the privacy of my home, I elect to do my housework in the nude, but I make sure my drapes are drawn. This was such a time.

After an hour or so, I thought I heard a scratching on the roof — then the skylight in our family room came crashing down! Almost scared to death, I ran to the area and saw this contractor staring at me — with severely lacerated hands!

It turns out that this contractor had come to our house early that morning and was starting to do his work on our chimney when he looked through the skylight and saw me!

Interested, he was pressing against the glass skylight hoping for a better view when the accident occurred. (This was the story he told our insurance man.)

To make a long story short, the contractor did sustain a serious injury from the broken glass, and now he is making a claim against our insurance company.

I think he has a lot of nerve. He admits that he was staring at me for at least half an hour. My husband is furious!

I wonder how this man's wife would feel if she knew the full details? I also wonder how this Peeping Tom would feel if some man spied on his wife when she was nude?

I know for a fact that he got a good look at me, since mutual friends have told me that he described my nudity in detail to his buddies. What do you make of this? — KELLY

DEAR KELLY: The contractor was authorized to be on your property, but your husband should have told you to expect him. Also, the contractor should have let you know beforehand that he would be working on your roof.

You really cannot blame the man for "looking" — but describing your nudity to his buddies in detail is caddish! Fortunately, you are insured.

The injured man has every right to be compensated for his injuries.

DEAR ABBY: I am a professional working mom-to-be. My problem is that I don't know what to say to people, especially male associates and clients, who touch my belly and make comments to me regarding my pregnancy. These gestures and comments make me feel very uncomfortable.

All I want to do is stick to the business at hand without offending anyone. Can you give me some snappy comebacks for these well-meaning people?

— STRICTLY BUSINESS MOM-TO-BE IN WOODLAND HILLS, CALIF.

DEAR STRICTLY: Don't feel called upon to deliver snappy comebacks.

Just look the ill-mannered clods in the eye and tell them to please keep their hands to themselves.

It's best to ignore the call of the sea

Dave Barry
Humor

There comes a time in a man's life when he hears the call of the sea.

"Hey, YOU!" are the sea's exact words.

If the man has a brain in his head, he will hang up the phone immediately. That's what I should have done recently when I was called to sea by my friends Hannah and Paddy, who had rented a sailboat in the Florida Keys. They love to sail. Their dream is to quit their jobs and sail around the world, living a life of carefree adventure, until their boat is sunk by an irate whale and they wind up drifting in a tiny raft and fighting over who gets to eat the sun block. At least that's the way I see it turning out.

The only safe way to venture onto the ocean is aboard a cruise ship the size of a rural school district. Even then you're not safe, because you might become trapped in your cabin due to bodily expansion. Cruise ships carry thousands of tons of high-calorie food, and under maritime law they cannot return to port until all of it has been converted into passenger fat. So there are at least eight feedings a day. Crew members often creep into cabins at night and use high-pressure hoses to shoot cheesecake directly down the throats of sleeping passengers.

But on cruise ships you rarely find yourself dangling from poles, which is more than I can say for the sailboat rented by Hannah and Paddy. The kept telling us this.

"It's an unusually low tide!" they'd shout helpfully as they went past. They were lucky the Jersey Girl doesn't have a cannon.

We'd been sitting there for quite a while when Captain Dan suggested, with a straight face, that if some of us held onto a large pole called the "boom" and swung out over the water, our weight might make the boat lean over enough to get free. I now realize that this was a prank. Fun-loving sailboat captains are probably always trying to get people out on the boom, but most people aren't that stupid.

We, however, had been substantially refreshed by beverages under a hot sun, so we actually did it. Four of us climbed up, hung our stomachs over the boom, kicked off from the side of the boat and NOOOOOO ...

Picture a giant shish kebab skewer sticking out sideways from a boat 10 feet over the water, except instead of pieces of meat on it, there are four out-of-shape guys, faces pale and sweating, flabby legs flailing, ligaments snapping like rifle shots. We instantly became a tourist attraction. A crowd gathered on shore, laughing and pointing. Some of them were probably sailboat captains.

"Look!" they were probably saying. "Captain Dan got FOUR of them out on the boom! A new record!"

Meanwhile, next to me, Paddy, a middle-aged attorney who is not, let's be honest, built like an Olympic gymnast, who is in fact built a lot like a gym, was saying, in an usually high voice, "We better bring the boom back now. OK? Now? OK?? WE BETTER BRING THE BOOM BACK NOW! BRING-THEBOOMBACKNOW!! I SAID ..."

"HANG ON!" Captain Dan was shouting. "She's about to move!"

People on shore were now taking pictures.

"IT'S AN UNUSUALLY LOW TIDE!" a helpful boater was shouting.

"Please," Paddy was saying, very quietly now.

"I think she's moving!" Captain Dan sang out.

In fact the Jersey Girl was exhibiting no more flotation than central Nebraska. As I clung to the boom, listening to Paddy whimper, two thoughts penetrated my pain: (1) He was PAYING for this experience; and (2) If you have to die, you want it to be for a noble cause. You don't want it to be for "Big (nickname for Richard) and the Extenders."

It turned out we didn't die. We finally got swung back onto the boat and began thinking about leading our lives without moving any muscles ever again. And eventually Captain Dan got the boat unstuck. He needed the help of a motorboat. I am certain this was also true of Columbus.

Safest ear-piercing done in doctor's office

Q&A

Q. My daughter has been begging for years to have her ears pierced. I always said she could if she still wanted to when she turned 13. Well, she's just turned 13, and hasn't changed her mind. I have never had my ears pierced and have heard some horror stories about infections, torn earlobes and such from other mothers. How can I ensure that the process is as safe and painless as possible?

A. The safest course is to have a doctor perform the procedure, according to Parenting Magazine. Otherwise, you run the risk of encountering an unsterile needle, which could transmit hepatitis.

The magazine lists a few other simple precautions that can make for safe ear-piercing:

• Don't permit your child to have the procedure done if she has a rash on her ears, or if there is a family history of keloid scarring.

• Until the wounds have healed — usually in three to four weeks — twist the earrings in place once a day and dab the earlobes front and back with hydrogen peroxide or rubbing alcohol.

• If you notice any sign of infection, such as redness or swelling, apply some topical antibiotic cream. If that doesn't clear it up in a few days, see a doctor.

• Don't remove the earrings until the holes are completely healed. Once the ears are healed, remind your child to always remove her earrings each night before bed.

• Make sure that earrings are lightweight. Heavy jewelry can tear the lobe or permanently stretch the hole.

Also avoid dangling earrings, especially for younger children.

There's too great a temptation for friends to tug on them; the earrings also may get tangled in long hair and can present a danger when kids play sports.

Q. My husband and I will be visiting Europe for two weeks in mid-August. We fly to Frankfurt, then travel by car and rail to Salzburg, Vienna, Prague, Budapest and possibly Cortina. We will be sightseeing during the day and dining in nice places in the evening. We also plan on seeing a performance of the Vienna Symphony and other musical presentations. What clothes would be appropriate for a trip of this sort? I am in my early 60s, but I have a youthful outlook and am comfortable in anything from jeans to sequins.

A. Pack your jeans (for daytime sightseeing) and a couple of sequined sweaters (for nights on the town).

In addition, take a small selection of coordinating separates — skirts and pants, shirts and sweaters, and one good knit dress or suit for those special musical evenings. For color and variety, add inexpensive accessories such as scarves and costume jewelry.

The weather should be comfortably warm during the daytime and pleasantly cool in the evening.

However, it will be decidedly chilly when you travel through mountain passes, and it may be hot if you make it to Cortina. Lightweight layers of clothing that your can pile on and peel off are best.

Because you're traveling solo, and not in an organized tour group, you'll be carrying your own luggage much of the time.

So travel light.

Take one plain, black purse; one all-weather coat (with the wool inner lining removed) for wet or windy days; and two pairs of shoes — broken-in walking shoes and socks for sightseeing, and black pumps in water-repellant, easy-to-clean patent leather for evening.

Decant toiletries into small containers of stock up on sample sizes.

The main thing to remember is that most people you encounter on your trip will see you only once.

As for you and your husband, you surely will be too busy looking at fresh and fascinating sights to care that you're wearing the same few outfits.

imbalanced (and in such instances) the brain, as an organ needs medications just as the liver, heart, or lung needs treatment when there is a problem with them."

An imbalance in the brain's chemicals (or neurotransmitters) causes a short-circuiting of the electrical impulses that transfer information in the brain. A person can no longer think clearly because, in essence, his or her "computer" is down.

With this "short-circuiting" of the thinking process, come many physical and, inevitably, psychological effects that profoundly affect both the individual and his or her relationships. Here are but a few of those effects:

Irritability and low stress tolerance. Coping effectively with stress requires clear, facilitative thinking. In a depression, dealing with even small stresses overwhelms a person's capacity to cope. Thus, a depressed person may withdraw from an intimate relationship in which there are expectations for performance, or from a family environment in which there are stresses, demands, crises, and changes in conditions moment-by-moment.

The withdrawal is unconscious, particularly at first, with a person staying later at work, or perhaps spending more time in front of the TV or going to bed later than a spouse. There is a conditioning process taking place in which that person - in unconsciously avoiding stressful conditions - avoids also his or her close relationships.

Anger and mood swings. Free-floating anger, often triggered at the slightest irritation, and unpredictable mood swings (sometimes both high and low) emanate from the short circuiting of the electrical charges in the brain. Although the emotional turmoil the depressed person experiences comes from inward, that person tends to assign the blame to others.

They are seemingly responsible for the stress or distress, for the anger, for the changes in mood. Thus, a depressed person may become increasingly disenchanted with a spouse, concluding that he or she is in a "bad" relationship.

Numbness. Among depression's insidious effects is a sense of numbness, of life "going by" while one is an observer on the side. In this numbed condition, a depressed person does not feel the caring feelings he or she would normally feel for others. Thus, such people may conclude that they no longer love a spouse. This mindset may be all the more reinforced as they find solace in other superficial, stress-free relationships with the opposite sex.

Lowered sex drive. Desire for a sexual relationship is usually the last thing on the mind of a seriously depressed person. Even moderately depressed people lose an arousal response and interest in pursuing sexual activity with a spouse to whom they have inadvertently developed an adversive response. A depressed person, however, is vulnerable to a sexual relationship outside of marriage, which may come to represent a haven from stress.

Fatigue and sleep disorder. Depression causes two other effects that impact relationships: undersleeping or oversleeping, and pervasive fatigue - both of which distract from a person's focus on his or her relationships. A person would often prefer to nap rather than relate.

Negativity and distortion of information. Negativity is an inherent effect of any depression. Too, a person who is struggling just to "think" and to stay on stable emotional ground cannot look out and see a panoramic view of what is happening around him or her. Thus, such a person will often misinterpret another's motives or behavior – a killer to any relationship.

The bottom line to anyone contemplating a divorce is this: Don't - under any circumstances - get a divorce in a depression! Medically treat the depression, if needed, so that you can see the lay of the land from the top of the mountain rather than from the depths of a black hole. It may change your perspective. And it may save your marriage!

guitarist Jerry Garcia is allowing some of his artwork to be reproduced on ties.

Don't expect the ties to feature musical themes — Garcia prefers abstract flora and fauna when it comes to his canvas, especially Hawaiian landscapes. "Jerry spends lot of time scuba diving there," says Nora Sage of the Art Peddler in Berkeley, Calif., publisher of Garcia's artwork.

Under the J. Garcia label, ties will range from $27.50 to $32.50 — a bargain when you consider Garcia's art runs from $2,600 to $15,000.

The ties will be available in late July.

Janzen book provides messages of hope

By Denise Turner
Times-News writer

Janzen

BOISE – "Life doesn't have to be over" is the message of John M. Janzen, who has written a book to help people deal with the tragedies of life.

"Who Is There to Share the Dream?" is Janzen's first book. It was a natural outgrowth of his work as president of Janzen and Associates Rehabilitation in Boise, he said. Personal experience is a factor, too.

In 1969, Janzen was diagnosed with terminal cancer and given six months to live. He lost a leg and hip to the disease, but he retained his positive outlook on life. "I decided that whether I had six months or many years to live, life is still worth living," he said. "I think 95 percent of anything is attitude."

Janzen, now 43, went on to earn a doctorate from the University of San Francisco. Today, he snow skis and scuba dives.

He also travels to remote countries of the world with his wife and 15-year-old son. He is currently working on a book about his travels from New Guinea to Indonesia, in addition to a sequel to "Who Is There to Share the Dream?"

Janzen's book is not just for those who have suffered physical injury, he explained.

It is also for those who have experienced the loss of a job, the loss of a loved one or any other trauma in life.

He characterized it as a book that speaks to the body, mind and spirit.

The author said wants to inspire people to dream again, and he provides them with step-by-step techniques. He is available to speak to groups about the ideas in his book. The ideas center on the power of the individual to choose a lifestyle leading to personal gratification and happiness – a choice, he says, he has made for himself.

"Who Is There to Share the Dream?," published by R & E Publishers and priced at $9.95, is available at Judi's Bookstore.

Protein in cow's milk shows growth of cancer cell in tests

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) – A protein found in cow's milk slowed the growth of human breast cancer cells in laboratory tests, a scientist says.

The growth-inhibiting protein, known as MDGI, is one of a family of such proteins, said Ronald Gorewit, a Cornell University animal science professor.

Unlike other mammals, cows don't get breast cancer, Gorewit said.

"Nobody's ever had a handle on why," he said. "One theory is that there are proteins like MDGI that inhibit the mutations of cancer genes."

'One theory is that there are proteins like MDGI that inhibit the mutations of cancer genes.'

— Ronald Gorewit, animal science professor

Gorewit said no human studies by Richard Grosse, a German molecular biologist and biochemist, Grosse, who has been working with Gorewit, found the protein in high concentrations in cows' mammary tissue, where its role is apparently to tell cells when to stop growing and start producing milk.

Gorewit said the protein may also stop potentially cancerous cells from becoming cancerous.

Barbara Vonderhaar, a breast cancer researcher at the National Cancer Institute in Bethesda, Md., called Gorewit's findings "potentially interesting, but very, very preliminary."

Breast cancer kills about 44,000 women annually in the United States.

The research is funded by Cornell's College of Agriculture and Life Sciences.

Doctors look at alternative to silicone implants

ST. LOUIS (AP) – A surgical procedure gaining attention across the country may provide a safer, more natural alternative to silicone gel breast implants.

The procedure involves taking excess skin and fat from a woman's abdomen, buttock or thigh to mold a new breast or breasts, said Roger Khouri, assistant professor in plastic and reconstructive surgery at Washington University's School of Medicine.

"The tissue is not rejected, sensation returns to the breast, which never occurs with implants, and you avoid the potential complication of leakage and disfiguring scar formation," Khouri said.

The procedure is being used primarily for women who have mastectomies and those who have had problems with breast implants, he said.

But as the technique, known as the microvascular free flap, is perfected and more surgeons are trained, it could be an alternative to implants for women who want to enlarge their breasts, Khouri said.

The development is important especially after an advisory panel of the FDA recommended last month that silicone gel implants be permitted only for reconstructive surgery. FDA Commissioner Dr. David Kessler is to make a final decision April 20.

Anne Gorman, a spokeswoman for the American Society of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgeons in Arlington Heights, Ill., said the technique so far has been used in only a very limited number of breast reconstructions. But interest in the procedure is growing, she said.

"I think that as more women are looking for alternatives to implant surgery, it's definitely something that's going to be getting more attention," she said.

Dr. Roger Khouri, assistant professor in plastic and reconstructive surgery at Washington University, describes a new implant technique.

Plastic surgeons more commonly are performing a similar type of reconstructive surgery using the women's own tissue. The conventional flap technique involves using tissue from the woman's abdomen that is still attached to the abdominal muscle to form a breast.

Khouri's technique involves completely detaching a section, or flap, of tissue, then reattaching it to the upper body and reconnecting the tiny blood vessels with the aid of a microscope.

"This way the tissue survives, and you can shape it, sculpt it, fold it and give it a new function," he said.

With the conventional method, the woman loses the use of some or all of the main abdominal muscle, depending on whether one or two breasts are reconstructed, Khouri said. With the free flap, she doesn't lose much muscle and gets the added benefit of a tummy tuck, a buttock lift or a thigh recontouring, he said.

William Shaw, professor and chief of the division of plastic surgery at the University of California, Los Angeles, is considered a leader in the free flap technique. Women need to be aware there is an alternative to breast implants, he said.

Drawbacks of the free flap technique include cost and time, the doctors said.

The procedure is more complicated, so it takes longer and costs more. In addition, the woman is left with a scar where the tissue is removed.

"At this stage, at least, it's hard to justify it for pure cosmetic reasons," Khouri said.

Clues link hormone-related chemical to prostate cancer

NEW YORK (P) – A small study suggests that men with high levels of a substance linked to the hormone testosterone are more likely to get prostate cancer, a finding that may pave the way for more effective treatment.

"I think we are on the right track of understanding the hormonal etiology of prostate cancer," the leading cancer among American men, said Dr. Ronald Ross, an investigator at the University of Southern California. "We may not be quite there, but we are not far from it."

Other experts called the research exciting but far from definitive.

Previous research by Ross and other investigators suggested men with high levels of testosterone are more likely to get prostate cancer. For instance, black American men, who have about 11 percent more testosterone than white American men, are 1½ to 2 times more likely to get prostate cancer.

Surprisingly, the latest study did not confirm the testosterone theory, but found a link between prostate cancer and a chemical that changes testosterone into two other forms, said Ross. The chemical is 5-alpha-reductase.

The study was published in the April 11 issue of Lancet, a British medical journal.

Investigators took blood samples from 50 black American men, 50 white American men, and 50 Japanese men living in Japan. Japanese men are about half as likely as white American men to get prostate cancer. Scientists studied men in their early 20s to identify early signs of hormonal changes.

"We fully expected testosterone would be very low (among Japanese men), but that's not the case at all. Testosterone was just as high as white Americans," said Ross.

The study found Japanese men had significantly lower levels of two changed forms of testosterone.

Studies indicate relationship between cocaine, heart attacks

Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — Two studies released last week provide more evidence that cocaine increases the risk of a heart attack.

"We believe it is a serious problem and definitely underreported," said Dr. Sherif Rezkalla of Marshfield, Wis., co-author of one of the new studies discussed in Dallas at the annual meeting of the American College of Cardiology.

The death of 22-year-old basketball star Len Bias in 1986 is the best-known case of a cocaine-related heart attack. A report published two years ago cited at least 58 such cases described in medical journals.

Considering that an estimated 25 million Americans have used cocaine at least once, there probably have been many more such cases, researchers say.

Scientists have theorized several ways that cocaine might increase heart attack risk. In a study published in late 1989, researchers from the University of Texas Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas reported that cocaine triggers spasms in coronary arteries. The drug prevents the body from clearing out adrenaline-like hormones that cause arteries to tighten.

Other research by Texas Southwestern scientists has shown that cocaine increases production of thromboxane — a substance on blood platelets that can cause clots and constrict vessels — in rabbits' aortas.

In the study reported last week, Texas Southwestern researchers compared the hearts of 24 people known to have been cocaine abusers and 14 who had not been abusers. The hearts were removed during autopsies by the Dallas County medical examiner's office.

An equal percentage of each group was found to have fatty deposits in coronary arteries. But the arteries of the cocaine users had thicker deposits.

Dr. Eric Eichhorn, the study's lead author, cautioned that it does not prove that cocaine use speeds up coronary artery disease.

Other factors might have accelerated fatty deposits in the cocaine users, said Eichhorn, director of the cardiac catheterization laboratory at the Dallas Veterans Administration Medical Center.

"Our information as to the patients' habits is quite limited," he said. For example, the Texas Southwestern researchers did not know whether the people whose hearts they studied were smokers.

And while the cocaine abusers and the non-abusers were equal in age, sex and body size, a disproportionate number of the abusers were black, Eichhorn said.

Race has not been identified as a risk factor for heart disease, but high blood pressure is known to be more common in blacks than in whites.

Still, Eichhorn said, the findings in rabbits support the contention that the differences seen in the autopsy study were caused by cocaine use.

Rezkalla's findings complement those by the Texas Southwestern scientists. Rezkalla and his collaborators took blood samples from 10 healthy volunteers who had never used cocaine.

The scientists then incubated platelets from the samples with cocaine.

After exposure to cocaine, platelets from five of the volunteers became much stickier. This increased stickiness could lead to the development of clots that cause heart attacks, Rezkalla said.

In addition, sticky platelets could cling to coronary artery walls, causing damage that sets the foundation for fatty deposits.

AIDS concern grows in former USSR

By Jeff Sommer
Newsday

MOSCOW – Men in white coats showed up at Larissa's office one morning and told her to come away with them. They said she had the AIDS virus and told her she was endangering the lives of people around her.

They wouldn't let her get a toothbrush or a change of clothes. They wouldn't let her phone her mother. Larissa had to climb into an ambulance in full view of scandalized co-workers. As sirens blared and lights flashed, she was whisked to her hometown hospital, midway between Moscow and St. Petersburg, and put in an isolation ward.

"No one would touch me," Larissa said recently, recalling those events of five years ago. "For one month until they released me, no nurses would come in my room. They slid food to me through a window. The only doctor who came near me wore a sealed outfit with a mask and plastic gloves."

As the pale, winter sunlight faded in the main AIDS hospital of the former Soviet Union, Larissa described a personal nightmare that began when she learned she was one of a handful of people in the country diagnosed as having the human immunodeficiency virus, which causes AIDS.

Specialists say she is terminally ill, and Larissa, now 32, says she is weak, depressed and frequently in pain. But when the Soviet medical establishment first caught her in its dragnet, her problems had little to do with her disease and everything to do with the methods of the Soviet state.

"They treated me like some kind of monster," she said. "I have no personal life now. Soon it won't matter anyway."

When Larissa was in the isolation ward, a doctor made her sign a statement acknowledging that she would be put in prison for eight years if she infected another person. Medical workers questioned her about her sex life.

Word that she had AIDS spread among friends and colleagues. Rumors began to circulate that she was a "prostitute" because she had revealed under questioning that she had eight lovers in her lifetime. She has lost her job, her friends and her marriage. "I don't know how much time I have left," she said, fatigue and depression showing in her face. "I'm preparing to die."

The experiences of Larissa — who asked that her real name and hometown be concealed to protect her from further stigmatization — are hardly unique.

"The Soviet Union has been practicing totalitarian medicine," said Dr. Alexander Voevodin, a leading Russian AIDS researcher. "Human-rights violations are occurring constantly. This is offensive simply for the pain and suffering it is causing. And it also happens to be ineffective. You cannot treat AIDS as though it is plague or cholera. You can't cure it. And even if you terrify people, you won't get them to change their sexual behavior."

But the traditional Soviet approach continues to be followed, in a kind of afterlife of the departed Soviet state. It includes mandatory tracing of sexual partners of those infected, deportation of infected foreigners and compulsory blood tests on an extraordinary scale. While exact figures are not available, the cost of the programs is enormous.

Last year, AIDS experts here say, a staggering 40 million blood tests for AIDS were administered throughout the country. A total of 120 million tests have been administered in the last few years. Because some people were tested several times, the total number of people who have received AIDS tests is smaller but still remarkable: 100 million, nearly one-third of the entire population, according to several top experts here. Pregnant women, anyone who receives treatment in a hospital, homosexuals and drug users are subject to compulsory AIDS testing, officials say.

Those who defend the state programs say the heavy-handed approach may be a key reason that the rate of infection is still very low. They fear that the country's breakup and economic crisis may render those programs ineffective.

"We are proud of our efforts to track down and halt the spread of the disease," said Nadezhda Serotina, chief AIDS expert at the Ministry of Public Health. "We're worried about what may happen in the future."

"Our society has been closed to the outside world to a very large extent," said Dr. Vadim Pokrovsky, director of the Moscow AIDS center, which continues to treat patients from throughout the former Soviet Union. "Until now, we have been able to go after the disease in ways that are impossible in the West."

In Larissa's case, state intervention was effective, if traumatic. She was found by authorities after a former lover in another city came down with AIDS. Medical workers interrogated him, demanding the name of every "sexual contact" he had ever had. He gave them a list that included her name.

Her blood test, which showed her as HIV-positive, put her on another list. After she was released from the isolation ward, she was required to come in for regular examination and treatment with drugs such as AZT, which is free of charge and will continue as long as she is alive. She also qualified for a small pension.

Larissa belongs to a small group of patients. According to official statistics, which undoubtedly understate the problem, there have been only 675 confirmed cases of infection with the AIDS virus in the former Soviet Union. Forty percent of these cases resulted from bungled medical practices at hospitals.

Cancer from saccharin might be limited to rats

LOS ANGELES (AP) – Despite warning labels that saccharin may be hazardous to human health, a study suggests the artificial sweetener's ability to cause cancer may be limited solely to rats, a researcher has said.

"Given what we know now, labeling and any fear with regard to saccharin is unwarranted," said Dr. Sam Cohen, vice chairman of pathology and microbiology at the University of Nebraska Medical Center in Omaha.

"The likelihood of saccharin causing cancer in humans is essentially zero. But we still have to prove that."

He presented his findings in suburban Anaheim during the annual meeting of the Federation of American Societies for Experimental Biology.

The study showed saccharin causes bladder cancer in rats by forming toxic crystals in their bladders. The research suggests saccharin doesn't cause human cancer because people lack the urine protein levels needed to form the crystals.

Cohen's research was funded by the National Cancer Institute and the International Life Sciences Institute, which represents food and beverage companies, including saccharin manufacturers. Nevertheless, Cohen's research and integrity drew praise from other scientists.

"This work is excellent. I think it is a valid conclusion that saccharin likely doesn't cause human cancer, said Dr. Bob Scheuplein, director of toxicological sciences at the U.S. Food and Drug Administration's food safety center.

More research is needed to confirm Cohen's conclusion, but the study might persuade Congress to rescind saccharin's warning label requirement, Scheuplein said by phone from Washington.

Cohen said Canada already is considering rescinding its saccharin ban because of his research.

Dr. Douglas Arnold, who heads general toxicology for Health and Welfare Canada's Health Protection Branch — Canada's FDA — said he couldn't comment on that possibility.

But "the hypothesis suggested by Dr. Cohen is very logical and very probable," he said. Arnold conducted a 1977 study linking high doses of saccharin to bladder cancer in rats.

Arnold's study spurred Canada's ban on saccharin as a food additive and prompted the FDA to propose a U.S. ban, which Congress blocked under industry pressure. Instead, Congress required saccharin products to carry labels warning the sweetener might be hazardous to humans.

Michael Jacobson, director of the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a Washington nutrition advocacy group, said Cohen's study wasn't definitive and "the body of evidence suggests saccharin slightly increases the risk of cancer" in people.

Jacobson urged people to avoid all three artificial sweeteners on the U.S. market — saccharin (Sweet 'N Low), aspartame (NutraSweet) and acesulfame-K, because "there are questions about the safety of all of them" and they aren't effective for weight loss.

In recent years, aspartame replaced saccharin in many products. But Cohen said saccharin still is widely used in packets, some diet beverages and in lipsticks, toothpaste, medicinal syrups and other products.

A fourth sweetener, cyclamate, is banned in the United States because of studies linking it to bladder cancer in rats.

Years ago, Cohen's research helped link saccharin to bladder cancer in rats, Arnold said.

In the new research, Cohen and his colleagues showed sodium saccharin causes bladder cancer in rats by reacting with two proteins in rat urine, alpha-2U-globulin and albumin. The reaction makes silicate crystals form in the bladder. Those crystals are toxic to cells lining the bladder. Such cells regenerate, but some are cancerous and grow into tumors, Cohen said.

Humans lack alpha-2U-globulin and have albumin concentrations 100 to 1,000 times weaker than rats — far too little to react with saccharin to produce toxic crystals, Cohen said. So he believes saccharin can't cause human bladder cancer.

Cohen showed saccharin doesn't cause cancer in mice because their urine proteins don't react to form toxic crystals. That probably explains why saccharin fails to cause cancer in hamsters and monkeys, he said.

Cohen's earlier experiments showed that calcium saccharin produces fewer cancer-promoting crystals in rat bladders than sodium saccharin does.

As a result, most saccharin products switched from sodium saccharin to calcium saccharin in mid-1990, Cohen said.

Coaches can help avert kids playing injured

WASHINGTON (AP) – Most kids get through the baseball season with no more than a bruise or a bump, but others are injury magnets, largely because of the way they grow, train or play ball, experts say.

The growth spurt that typically arrives at 11 or 12 years of age does not treat all body parts evenly, said Dr. Lyle J. Micheli, director of sports medicine at Children's Hospital in Boston.

Bones grow faster than either the muscles or the tendons that attach muscle to bone, and one result of this imbalance is a tightness in the throwing muscles, he said.

Throwing too much during a growth spurt can push tightness beyond the breaking point, Micheli said. Symptoms can include pain, tenderness, or a loss of ability to control the ball. Injuries are generally to the elbow, arm, shoulder and back.

If the injury is caught early enough, it can be treated with such things as rest, ice and reduced training, notes the National Youth Sports Foundation for the Prevention of Athletic Injuries, a Boston-based professional group.

The foundation says training should be cut in half until all symptoms are gone, and rebuilt in steps of no more than 10 percent a week until the player is back to normal.

Not allowing time for healing makes an injury worsen, said orthopedic surgeon Letha Griffin of Atlanta.

What starts as a minor problem can lead to a torn ligament, strained muscle or even a fractured bone, she said.

In the most advanced cases, the growing ends of bones can be damaged, Micheli said.

"It can eventually become so severe that the youth is sidelined for weeks or months," Griffin said.

A good conditioning program can help to prevent this, Griffin said.

Kids today are out of shape, so targeting exercise only at throwing muscles can quickly create imbalances that shift force onto other muscles and tendons, which can't handle it, Micheli said.

Supervised strength training can help to develop muscle safely, he said. For instance, wall pushups, in which the player leans against a wall from 30 inches out, can help build balanced arm and shoulder strength, he said.

Stretches before games or practices loosens muscles, and aerobic exercise such as running or swimming can build overall endurance, as Little League Baseball outlines in Play Ball! The Official Little League Fitness Book. Stretches can include shrugging the shoulders, or rotating the arms as they're extended straight out from the player's sides, the book says.

Throwing form is very important, especially in pitching, said J.B. Bramhall of Bryan, Texas. An orthopedic surgeon and team physician for Texas A&M, Bramhall worked with colleagues at the American Sports Institute in Birmingham, Ala., to develop a computerized model of proper pitching form.

"Good balance is number one," Bramhall said. Pitching involves the whole body, starting with the windup and ending with the follow through, and balance helps to prevent excess forces from being concentrated across the shoulder or in the elbow, he said.

Coaches should teach players sound biomechanics, Bramhall said. Coaches also should avoid the temptation to keep calling on their star pitcher to win the game, he said. That could set up the pitcher for injury.

One unpublished Japanese study says the upper limit seems to be about 300 skill throws a week, said Micheli. Beyond that, the injury rate went up dramatically, he said.

You can run from problems

WASHINGTON (AP) – Contrary to popular belief, you can run from your troubles.

A vigorous aerobic workout definitely links up with a drop in anxiety, said William P. Morgan, a researcher at the University of Wisconsin, Madison, who did some of the earliest work in the field.

But this doesn't mean exercise causes the reduction, Morgan added. The same thing can happen after resting quietly.

"That led us to propose it may not be the exercise per se, but the distraction from the cares and the worries of the day," he said.

Morgan doesn't take this to mean that you can quit exercising. Resting quietly won't give you improved muscle tone or a reduced risk of heart disease, he noted.

And exercise seems to have a somewhat longer benefit than inactive forms of relaxation, said researcher John Raglin of Indiana University. The reduction can last two to four hours after exercise, compared with about 20 minutes for inactive relaxation, he said.

Exercisers can notice the benefits said researcher Steven J. Petrozzello of the University of Illinois. "It isn't a huge effect, but (exercise) is having a significant effect."

When Petrozzello was at Arizona State University, he and his colleagues analyzed data from more than 120 studies in an attempt to overcome weaknesses in individual studies and create a broader base for statistical conclusions. Their report was published in the journal Sports Medicine in 1991. Only aerobic exercise (for instance, walking, running or cycling) seems to reduce anxiety, Petrozzello reported. Weight training did not. However, he said, relatively little work has been done on such non-aerobic exercise.

How long your workouts need to be is less clear, Petrozzello said. Although some studies have reported that about 20 minutes of exercise is required, he doesn't consider the issue settled. Closer analysis indicates that less work can reduce state anxiety — how you feel right now — if not trait anxiety, which is how you feel most of the time, he said.

Trait anxiety, which is more stable, also may be reduced for habitual exercisers, even if they do less than 20 minutes of exercise at a time, but more research is needed on that, the journal article says.

How hard you work doesn't seem to make much difference, the researcher said. Workouts from a moderate 40 percent of maximal aerobic capacity to a vigorous 80 percent all had about the same payoff, he said.

And whether you're a regular exerciser or doing it only once also makes little difference, he said. Both reduce anxiety.

Some researchers question the effectiveness of extracting useful data from flawed studies, however. "There are those who would argue that you can't put baloney into a sausage grinder and get succulent salami out," Morgan said.

He and Petrozzello agree that research has not discovered the physiological mechanism by which the body may transmute exercise into anxiety reduction.

Beta-endorphins, the brain chemicals that have been termed the body's natural opiates, don't seem to hold the secret, said Patrick J. O'Connor of Arizona State University. His own research with the brain chemical dopamine also found no association.

Unlike other forms of anxiety-reduction, exercise makes you uncomfortable as you do it, Raglin said. So it's possible that the stress hormones that go up because of exercise lead somehow to relaxation afterward.

Utahns study bipolar depression

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) – Severe mood swings from depression to emotional highs and back again cost Laura Haggard her profession as a teacher three decades ago.

That was long before doctors knew what caused manic depression and society had accepted it as a legitimate mental illness.

Now in her early 60s, Haggard has rebuilt her life in Salt Lake with the help of counseling and antidepressants. At the same time, doctors and researchers have made huge strides in understanding the debilitating condition that strikes tens of thousands of Utahns.

> '... there are a lot of people out there who have jobs and families and continue to take their medication and are able to go on with their lives.'
> —Celeste Bowers-Irons, director of the Utah Mental Health Association

Medicine's principal weapon is the drug lithium, a chemical regulator that helps about 75 percent of the sufferers escape the roller coaster of depression and mania.

And the name of the illness was changed in the late 1980s by the National Mental Health Association from manic-depression to bipolar depression — a less stigmatizing description.

It was years before Haggard knew she suffered from bipolar depression. Doctors had told her she merely had mood swings.

"At the time, we knew nothing about depression," Haggard said. "My minister and my husband didn't know what was wrong."

"They thought if I would go out and buy myself a new hat I would be fine. My in-laws thought it was a lack of character. People just didn't understand," she said.

Celeste Bowers-Irons, executive director of the Utah Mental Health Association, said the chemical disorder affects men and women equally, with an average onset in the 20s. Sometimes it appears as early as the mid-teens, she said.

Anxiety, panic attacks and sleeplessness can make a person feel defeated. But Bowers-Irons said it's important to realize the illness is just as treatable as a broken arm or pneumonia.

"The fact of the matter is that there are a lot of people out there who have jobs and families and continue to take their medication and are able to go on with their lives," she said.

Researcher Dr. William Byerley, an associate professor of psychiatry at the University of Utah, hopes his studies will further break down the stigma tied to bipolar depression.

Gooding 10-year-old girl is Idaho MDA poster child

The Times-News

GOODING – Ten-year-old Melissa Barnes of Gooding is the Muscular Dystrophy Association's 1992 Poster Child for Idaho.

Shaun Sullens, the association's district director, made the announcement. "As the Idaho poster child, Sullens said, "Melissa will serve as the association's junior goodwill ambassador." Melissa will take part in year-round educational and fund-raising drives, in addition to appearing at other special events in the area.

Melissa is the daughter of Sam and Jeannette Garcia. Her condition was diagnosed as Werdnig-Hoffman disease at the age of 18 months. This is one of the 40 neuromuscular diseases covered by MDA's research and patient care programs.

MDA is working to defeat neuromuscular disease through worldwide research, comprehensive patient care and professional and public health education. The association funds some 500 research projects a year. It also supports some 230 outpatient clinics at which patients receive medical care, counseling and orthopedic aids at no direct cost to them or their families.

MDA clinics serving the Southern Idaho area are located at the Elk's Rehabilitation Center and St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center. Jerry Lewis is national chairman of MDA.

'Nature's cruel joke' doesn't make retinitis sufferers laugh

BALTIMORE (AP) – Marilyn Green has accidentally sat in a stranger's lap in a movie theater because she can't see when it's dark.

Paul Karos, an airline analyst, reads his industry reports with a video camera.

And Evelyn Swecker carries flashlights in her pocketbook to read restaurant menus.

They each have a type of retinitis pigmentosa, a group of inherited, progressive diseases that cause night blindness and tunnel vision.

Their mishaps and obstacles are familiar to 100,000 people in this country, according to estimates of the National Retinitis Pigmentosa Foundation Inc., based in Baltimore.

"The hardest thing is that people think you look normal, and yet you have this severe disability," said Green, a former model who now runs a modeling agency in Greensboro, N.C.

No known treatments are available for retinitis pigmentosa.

The disease attacks the cells lining the back of the eye that capture light and transmit signals to the brain.

As the disease progresses, the eyes need more and more light to see.

Victims often cannot drive, walk at night or see the stars. In many cases, the deterioration is gradual, but the end result is often blindness.

Most difficult for non-sufferers to understand is that the field of vision shrinks.

"If there are three people standing in front of you and you're looking at the person in the middle you can still see the people at the sides. I can't," said Swecker, vice president of the Maryland affiliate of the RP foundation.

"What we tell people is it's kind of like looking through your fist if you make a small opening in it," she said.

"It's sort of like looking at life through a keyhole."

She now has only a 7-degree field of vision, compared with the normal 100-degree field.

Some people just say, 'I wish it was done and over with: completely blind.' It's like nature's cruel joke," Swecker said.

In coming to terms with the disease, Karos has rejected that attitude and pushed himself all the harder to succeed.

"A lot of my fear about my eyes made me a workaholic," said Karos, who uses a video reading machine that projects text on a 19-inch screen.

Karos, who was diagnosed at 8 with retinitis pigmentosa, said the toughest part for him was feeling left out.

He couldn't play hockey, his favorite sport.

"As an RP kid you're afraid to go to parties because they're dark. Dating is a problem because you can't drive. I was always lucky in that my girlfriends were usually willing to drive," said Karos, 29, who grew up in Minneapolis.

Research has blossomed in the last few years, said Jeanette S. Felix, geneticist and director of science for the foundation.

"Diagnostic tests have become very sophisticated, and the genetic research has been exploding," she said.

In December, a mouse was found suffering from a disease similar to one of the forms of human retinitis pigmentosa.

That provides scientists with a guinea pig for testing treatments, Felix said.

Although the disease was identified in the 1930s, little research had been conducted when the foundation began, in 1974.

The foundation now funds 13 research groups at universities and research centers and is supporting the research of 35 individuals. Ms. Felix said she could not predict how many years it will take to develop a treatment or a cure.
